Artists turning discarded 'junk' into modern 'funk'

Studio 421, DHP hosting Trashion show

DONNA B. STINNETT / THE GLEANER

Artist Kyle Cox works on a garment in his workroom at Studio 421 in downtown Henderson. Cox will be one of the judges for the upcoming Trashion Show presented by Downtown Henderson Partnership and Studio 421.

For as long as he's been interested in art, which is pretty much his whole life, Kyle Cox has been taking unwanted and discarded things and giving them a whole new life.

Pieces of old costume jewelry or jewels from a broken chandelier become new adornments for fashion shoes and sunglasses, or a completely new piece of jewelry.

Worn-out belts may get transformed into covering for furniture.

Or old compact discs may be reworked and turned into shiny "scales" for a couture jacket worthy of the runway.

"It's just a constant thing for me," said Cox, one of the featured artists at Studio 421, an artists' cooperative in downtown Henderson. Cox's collection there is known as Pop Prince Couture.

"It's fun," he continued. "Instead of throwing something away you reuse it."

With his appreciation for recycling and reusing materials, it's only natural that the young artist will be one of the judges for Henderson's first Trashion Show taking place on April 27 in honor of Earth Day and presented by the Downtown Henderson Partnership and Studio 421.

"This is a big event in other cities and it looks like so much fun," said Studio 421 owner Lorna Littrell. "But since it's the first year, I think everyone is a little afraid

"I have to explain it to them because it's so foreign," she added, "but once people hear more about it or look at photos online they're excited, interested and want to know more."

The idea of a "Trashion Show" or "Junk to Funk" show is that participants design a piece of clothing made with only trash or discarded or unwanted items as their materials. These materials can only be held together by duct tape, safety pins or twine.

"But I don't want people to think it has to be just trash," Littrell said. "It can be anything that people might just be throwing away."

Highland mine seeks rezoning for air shaft

Ventilation fan will reduce noise pollution

By Frank Boyett
fboyett@thegleaner.com
270-831-8342

Plans to develop an air shaft for the Highland coal mine about a half-mile from Corydon will be considered by the Henderson City-County Planning Commission when it meets Tuesday evening.

The property involves 9.2 acres at 12373 U.S. 60-West, near the intersection with Housebridge Road. Corydon Resources LLC is asking that 2.3 acres currently zoned agricultural and 6.8 acres currently zoned highway commercial be rezoned heavy industrial and consolidated. The mine's permits are in the process of being transferred to Highland Mining Co. LLC of St. Louis.

The Highland mine has its entrance in Union County, but most of its unmined coal reserves lie east of Corydon. A ventilation shaft is needed to continue mining in that direction.

The shaft would be drilled on the northwest corner of the property. "Topsoil berms will be built around the ventilation fan, to screen the fan and provide noise buffering," according to background information provided by planning commission staff. "The ventilation fan itself is designed to push decibels or noise upward into the sky, to lessen the impact of noise pollution on the surrounding area."

No blasting or coal removal is intended for the property, company representatives said.

Similar concerns were voiced by neighbors when Patriot Coal Co. installed a ventilation fan on Upper Delaware Road in 2009, but no further complaints were heard after the fan was installed. That mine has since shut down. The fan to be installed on U.S. 60, by the way, is the same one that had originally been installed on Upper Delaware Road.

Obama, GOP refuse to budge on budget pact

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Gridlocked once more, President Barack Obama and Republican congressional leaders refused to budge in their budget standoff Friday as $85 billion in across-the-board spending cuts bore down on individual Americans and the nation's still-recovering economy. "None of this is necessary," said the president after a sterile White House meeting that portended a long standoff.

Even before Obama formally ordered the cuts required by midnight, their impact was felt thousands of miles away. In Seattle, the King County Housing Authority announced it had stopped issuing housing vouchers under a federal program that benefits "elderly or disabled households, veterans, and families with children."

The president met with top lawmakers for less than an hour at the White House, then sought repeatedly to fix the blame on Republicans for the broad spending reductions and any damage that they inflict. "They've allowed these cuts to happen because they refuse to budge on closing a single wasteful loophole to help reduce the deficit," he said, renewing his demand for a comprehensive deficit-cutting deal that includes higher taxes.

Construction activity slow here in February

By Chuck Stinnett
cstinnett@thegleaner.com

Construction was mostly quiet around Henderson and Henderson County last month, according to the latest building permit reports.

The cities of Henderson and Corydon along with Henderson County issued permits totaling just $612,221, down from $971,024 in February 2012.

"February was a slow month for construction in Henderson County," Randy Tasa, the county's codes administrator, noted.

But warmer weather could trigger more activity.

"March is usually when building starts to pick up and we hope this holds true," he said.

The city of Corydon issued a $170,000 permit to Tim and Joda Southard and Just Storage LLC for construction of two mini-storage buildings at 541 U.S. 60-West, including one measuring 30 by 320 feet and one measuring 20 by 297 feet.

The city of Henderson issued an $80,000 permit to Glen Stone for remodeling the building at 238 N. Main St. into four apartments and retail space.

It also issued a $35,000 permit to Palmer Operations LLC for demolishing the former Dixie Mart/East 'N Foods/Dollar General building at 2022 Clay

Deaths

James W. "Bill" Armstrong

WINONA, Minn. – James W. "Bill" Armstrong, 85, Winona, formerly of Henderson, died Saturday, Feb. 23, 2013.

He was born Jan. 28, 1928, in Evanston, Ill., the son of James W. "Jim" Armstrong and Francele H. "Skeet" Armstrong. He began school in Evanston, where his father was an associate professor of speech and dean of men at Northwestern University. His family moved to Henderson in 1935, where he attended Jefferson Street School and Barret Manual Training High School. During World War II, with his father in the U.S. Navy, he moved to Murray, where he graduated from Murray Training High School in the summer of 1945.

That fall he entered Northwestern University's School of Engineering and graduated with a degree in chemistry in the summer of 1948. For several years, he worked as a photographer for the The Gleaner and Journal, which was edited by his grandfather, Leigh Harris, and later by his mother, Francele H. Armstrong.

In 1950, at the start of the Korean War, he enlisted in the Army, opting to enter as a private instead of going to Officer Candidate School. He served first at the Army Motion Picture Studio in Astoria, N.Y., and later as a public information staff member and cartoonist attached to the 24th Infantry Division in Sendai, Japan. He was honorably discharged in 1953 at the rank of sergeant.

Returning to Henderson, Bill met his future wife, Ellen G. Williams, when he went to photograph her because she had just won a high school speech contest. They were married Aug. 5, 1955, and enjoyed 58 years of loving companionship. They shared a passion for music, often singing duets together in church and at weddings, and held a deep mutual commitment to their church.

After marrying Ellen, Bill left the newspaper business to enter graduate school at Indiana University, from which he graduated with a doctoral degree in education, specializing in educational technology. In 1960, Bill took his young family to Nigeria under the aegis of the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID). They lived in northern Nigeria for two years, an experience that shaped the way they saw the world forever after. They were always generous to foreign students, especially anyone coming from Africa.

After returning from abroad, Bill first taught at Indiana State University in Terre Haute and then moved to Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo, where he worked until his retirement. He spent his career teaching future K-12 teachers how to use teaching aids from filmstrips to, eventually, Apple computers.

Bill devoted a good deal of his life to Westminster Presbyterian Church in Portage, Mich., serving as ordained elder and deacon and helping for many years to lead the church's youth group. Bill served on the session, worked with the Great Lakes Presbytery and sang every Sunday in the choir. He had a quiet but deep faith which was an inspiration to many.

Bill will be remembered fondly as a loving husband and father, a diligent leader in the church, an inspiring teacher, and a kind and gentle man with a deep love of nature and an indomitable sense of humor (he was especially fond of puns). He bore the hardships of Parkinson's disease with dignity and still enjoyed poetry and music in his final days.

Surviving are his wife, Ellen; two sons, James W. Armstrong and his wife, Laura, of Winona and Richard H. Armstrong and his wife, Dawn, of Houston; one daughter, Jane Fisher of Kalamazoo; four grandchildren; two stepgrandchildren; and one brother, Don Armstrong and his wife, Anne, of Shelbyville, Ky.

A memorial service will be held in Portage on June 22.

Expressions of sympathy may take the form of contributions to the memorial garden at Westminster Presbyterian Church, 1515 Helen Ave., Portage, MI 49002.

Bonnie Franklin, 'One Day At a Time' star dies

■ Pancreatic cancer claims popular actress

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – Bonnie Franklin, the pert, redheaded actress whom millions came to identify with for her role as divorced mom Ann Romano on the long-running sitcom "One Day at a Time," has died.

She died Friday at her home in Los Angeles due to complications from pancreatic cancer, family members said. She was 69. Her family had announced she was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer in September.

Franklin was a veteran stage and television performer before "One Day At a Time" made her a star.

Developed by Norman Lear and co-created by Whitney Blake — herself a former sitcom star and single mother raising future actress Meredith Baxter — the series was groundbreaking for its focus on a young divorced mother seeking independence from a suffocating marriage.

It premiered on CBS in December 1975, just five years after the network had balked at having Mary Tyler Moore play a divorced woman on her own comedy series, insisting that newly single Mary Richards be portrayed as having ended her engagement instead.

On her own in Indianapolis, Ann Romano was raising two teenage girls — played by Mackenzie Phillips, already famous for the film "American Graffiti," and a previously unknown Valerie Bertinelli. "One Day At a Time" ran on CBS until 1984, by which time both daughters had grown and married, while Romano had remarried and become a grandmother. During the first seven of its nine seasons on the air, the show was a Top 20 hit.

Franklin herself was married for 29 years. Her husband, TV producer Marvin Minoff, died in 2009.

Born Bonnie Gail Franklin in Santa Monica, Calif., she entered show business at an early age. She was a child tap dancer and actress, and a protege of Donald O'Connor, with whom she performed in the 1950s on NBC's "Colgate Comedy Hour."

A decade later, she was appearing on such episodic programs as "Mr. Novak," "Gidget" and "The Man from U.N.C.L.E."

Audit: Sheriff has deficit, owes fiscal court

The Associated Press

FRANKFORT – A state audit has found that an eastern Kentucky sheriff's office made several managerial mistakes last year and ended up with a deficit of more than $100,000.

The Lexington Herald-Leader cited an auditor's report released Thursday that showed Jackson County Sheriff Denny Peyman also owes $277,915 to the Fiscal Court for payroll assistance that dates to January 2011 when he took office.

The audit noted problems with "disallowed expenditures," exceeding salary limits and not adequately monitoring fuel purchases.

Peyman responded in the audit that he has or will address all the concerns, including last year's $112,889 deficit.

He said all bank statements and ledgers are now current, that he will repay $519 for some charges and that he has implemented new policies on fuel purchases.

He said he is also working on the salary issue.

Meanwhile, Jackson County Judge-Executive William O. Smith said the Fiscal Court took control of the sheriff's office in October.

"I've been in office for 20 years, and this is the worst audit I've ever seen of a county office," Smith said, adding that Peyman still owes a lot of money to Fiscal Court.

"We have to get our money from the sheriff's office," he said. "It has caused us to get behind in certain areas, like our retirement system."

Smith said the fiscal court took over control of the sheriff's office last October.

State pension proposal mired in legislative gridlock

By Roger Alford
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — A proposal to shore up Kentucky's financially troubled pension system for government retirees hit political gridlock Friday, despite a previous pledge of bipartisan cooperation between the Democratic-controlled House and Republican-led Senate.

Democratic House Speaker Greg Stumbo challenged Senate Republicans on Friday to "put on their big boy pants." Republican Senate President Robert Stivers struck a more cooperative tone, saying he wants negotiations with the House to resolve the pension issue in the final eight working days of the legislative session.

Lawmakers had begun the legislative session promising a new day of bipartisan cooperation. Stivers had replaced retired Senate President David Williams, the often prickly Republican who political opponents had dubbed "the bully from Burkesville."

Stivers, Stumbo and Democratic Gov. Steve Beshear kicked off the legislative session in early January with promises of cooperation. The rosy atmosphere turned gray Thursday when the Senate rejected the House's proposals to shore up the pension system. The Senate sent two bills back to the House to be readdressed. The House refused.

The result was an exchange of heated political rhetoric.

"The Senate will act on it or it will just die," Stumbo told reporters Friday morning. "If the Senate wants to put on their big boy pants and solve it, we're ready to do that. But their actions so far ha ven't been reflective that that's what they want to do."

Republican Senate Floor Leader Damon Thayer said the House's actions jeopardize pension reform and raise the specter of a special legislative session later this year to address the issue. He said the Senate is willing "to meet in the middle" with the House to avoid a special session that would cost taxpayers some $60,000 a day.

Stivers said the Senate wants the pension issue resolved, saying in a floor speech that "the bully from Burkesville is not here anymore" and that he and his colleagues "have taken the politics and gamesmanship out of this issue."

"It's not this chamber that has been derelict in performing their duties," he said.

Senate Republicans and House Democrats have long been at odds over trying to address Kentucky's financially troubled pension systems, which have a combined $33 billion unfunded liability.

Redistricting bill in sight

FRANKFORT — House lawmakers are still working on the always politically divisive issue of legislative redistricting.

State Rep. Brent Yonts, chairman of the House State Government Committee, said Thursday a redistricting bill is nearly complete and will be unveiled soon. He had included the issue as an agenda item Thursday before pulling it.

Lawmakers will need to rush to get the matter resolved. Only about nine working days remain in the current legislative session.

Redistricting is supposed to occur every 10 years to account for population changes found by the U.S. Census Bureau.

Legislation that passed last year was struck down by the state Supreme Court. Justices found the new districts weren't balanced by population and didn't comply with the "one person, one vote" mandate in federal and state law.

Reed native is reigning Mrs. Florida

By Erin Schmitt

When Marla Pryor Mundy was a little girl growing up in Reed, she watched beauty pageants and envisioned herself wearing the crown.

"I always told my mom, 'wouldn't that be awesome to actually be able to win a pageant?' " she said Thursday. "I never did do it until now and I won."

Mundy, 35, is the reigning Mrs. Florida American Beauty 2013, a pageant for married women. She also won Mrs. Tampa last fall, which qualified her for the state title.

Mundy and her husband, Bart, who is originally from Mt. Vernon, Ind., live in Spring Hill, Fla. The couple met in Evansville during Bible study.

DARRIN PHEGLEY / THE GLEANER

Reed native Marla Pryor Mundy is the reigning Mrs. Florida.

The couple moved from Boonville, Ind., to Florida about three years ago, he said.

It was Mundy's love of singing country and southern gospel that led her to the pageantry circuit in Florida.

"I love to sing," she said. "I just loved it at an early age and never stopped."

When she and Bart moved to Florida, she was just looking to perform at a pageant, but the director also suggested she enter.

So she did, and was able to perform. Mundy ended up wining the talent division and the overall title for Mrs. Tampa on Oct. 27.

Her collection of trophies, which she keeps at home on the bookshelf, was added to with the Mrs. Florida pageant. Besides the overall title, she also won for talent and interview.

As the reigning Mrs. Florida, Mundy attends ribbon cuttings, parades and charitable functions. She was recently in Perry County, Ind., for a Perry County Little Warriors fundraiser that benefits children with cancer.

The Mundys visit the Henderson area two or three times a year.

Marla has several relatives who still reside here, including her mom, Ginger Nelson of Henderson; stepfather Truman Nelson; father, Marlin Thomas Pryor Jr. of Reed; brother, Tom Pryor of Reed, and several extended family members.

During her visit this week, Mundy drew an assortment of people ranging from preschool-aged kids to soldiers who stopped and asked her for a picture as she wore her Mrs. Florida sash.

The soprano has cut two CDs, the first a self-titled album and the second called "Love Not the Nail," which is available at The Vineyard in Evansville or by emailing Mundy at Mrs.FloridaAmericanBeauty2013@yahoo.com.

Kentucky town with gay ordinance getting TV offers

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — A southeastern Kentucky town that attracted national attention when it adopted a gay-rights ordinance is getting offers for a reality-based television show.

Vicco City Attorney Eric Ashley says talks over a TV show are in the early stages.

The city council met on Monday and gave Ashley the authority to speak with production companies who have expressed interest in filming a show in the Appalachian town.

Ashley says, however, he is wary of any offers that would "perpetuate a particular stereotype."

Ashley says there have been several pitches, including one from ABC News.

He also says Comedy Central's "The Colbert Report" was filming a segment in Vicco earlier this week.

The tiny town of 300 residents enacted an anti-discrimination ordinanceon Jan. 14.

U.S. Bank in Owensboro expanding

Gleaner staff

U.S. Bank announced Friday that it plans to expand its mortgage operations in Owensboro by adding a new facility and 332 jobs,

It will invest more than $15.2 million in expanding at the city's Mid America Air Park.

The bank opened its first mortgage servicing center in Owensboro in the late 1970s.

It added additional centers in subsequent years and now employs nearly 1,900 employees in Owensboro.

The centers support U.S. Bank's portfolio of more than 1.6 million mortgage loans that total approximately $266 billion in balances.

To encourage the latest expansion, the Kentucky Economic Development Finance Authority preliminarily approved the company for tax incentives up to nearly $2.9 million through the Kentucky Business Investment program plus other incentives.

U.S. Bank is the fifth-largest bank in the United States.

Bill filed to preserve tailwater fishing

The Associated Press

The senators from Kentucky and Tennessee have introduced legislation to preserve tailwater fishing in the dams of the Cumberland River.

The legislation, called the Freedom to Fish Act, would prevent the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers from installing barriers along portions of the river that would block fishing access to tailwaters.

Dams are popular fishing spots because small fish get trapped and attract larger ones like catfish and bass.

Corps officials say boating too close to the spillways at the dams is a safety risk and that barriers will go up this year.

Anglers in both states have been voicing outrage over the plan.

The legislation was filed Thursday by Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky and his fellow Republican from the state, U.S. Sen. Rand Paul, along with Republican U.S. Sens. Lamar Alexander and Bob Corker of Tennessee.

Kentucky woman found guilty in Montana

BOZEMAN, Mont. — A 54-year-old Kentucky woman who prosecutors said pulled a gun on a Montana attorney during mediation in a lawsuit has been found guilty of misdemeanor assault with a weapon.

She paid a $575 fine and was released after spending more than 10 months in jail on $1 million bail.

The Bozeman Daily Chronicle reports Mary Ann McCulley was initially charged with a felony, but jurors on Thursday found her guilty of a misdemeanor, which carries a maximum six-month jail sentence.

Prosecutors alleged McCulley was in Bozeman from Owensboro, Ky., meeting with attorneys last April 25 when she slammed documents on a table and said, "This is my final offer that you are going to sign." Witnesses say she pulled a pistol loaded with birdshot.

Taking away guns makes us less safe

Why is it so hard for some people to understand?

Adam Lanza, who killed 27 innocent people at Newtown, Conn., did not pause to recollect if he had updated the registration on his firearm. James Holmes, who murdered 12 people at a Colorado theater, did not care about the capacity of his gun magazines. And George Hennard, who shot more than 40 people in a Luby's Restaurant in Texas, killing 23, did not check to see if he was carrying his weapons in a "gun-free zone."

But Hennard might have been stopped had future Texas Rep. Suzanna Hupp not obeyed a Texas law and left her gun in her car. At the time people were not permitted to carry a weapon into public places. She said, "It still makes me angry when I think about it. You can't go up against a gun with a salt shaker or a butter knife." Suzanna watched as both her parents were killed.

The man who commits atrocities such as these will not be stopped by another law placed on the books by a well-meaning politician seeking approval because he did something, but he might be stopped by an armed citizen who is prepared to protect himself and innocents around him

George Washington said, "The very atmosphere of firearms anywhere and everywhere restrains evil and interference — they deserve a place of honor with all that is good."

Laws such as those proposed by Rep. David Watkins will do nothing to prevent a person bent on doing harm from proceeding to do just that. They only frustrate an honest citizen who wishes to exercise his right to protect himself and those who are trusting in him for their protection.

William E. Mortis, Henderson

We must defend Second Amendment rights

We need to protect our constitutional rights and that includes the Second Amendment rights. I cannot see how banning the sale of military-style assault weapons, conducting background checks, reducing large capacity magazines and registration of gun owners would be a violation of the Second Amendment rights.

No one is saying that there should or would be a ban on all guns. People who enjoy target practice and hunting, or feel they need a handgun in their home for protection, would still have that right, just not large capacity magazines. These military-style assault weapons have no business being available to the general public, especially the criminally insane and the criminals, any more than machine guns and sawed off shotguns. They are manufactured for the sole purpose to be used by the military and law enforcement personnel to kill humans.

I have written to my senators and representative about this. Sen. McConnell has not responded, but Sen. Paul and Rep. Whitfield did. I get from their response that they are not supportive of anything to try to stop gun violence in this country. They say that no matter what is done all of it can't be stopped and they support the Second Amendment.

So, because it would be impossible to stop all gun violence, nothing should be done to stop any and protect our children and citizens from being gunned down by a madman on a killing spree. I disagree. I think something should be done.

The people who are against this are gun lobbyists that pump millions of dollars into the campaigns of politicians and misinform the public of the facts so that they become afraid. The politicians only care about being re-elected, and the gun lobbyists only care about selling guns.

The people that say first the banning of assault weapons and then all guns are totally wrong. How in the world do they think this do-nothing Congress would ever pass any kind of legislation to ban all weapons? That will never happen.

All they do is go against everything good or bad in the House and filibuster everything in the Senate, obstruct and block everything. That is, when they show up for work.

Kenny Wallace, Henderson

Focus should be on budget, not guns

I am addressing the article about state Rep. David Watkins co-sponsoring gun registration legislation, House Bill 265.

Registration — That would mean you could not own guns without the government knowing how many and what kind of guns. That's unconstitutional.

Background checks — This is already a law.

Storage — How would this law be enforced? Go to everyone's house, ask to see how many guns you have? I think police officers have more important things to do.

Theft — People who have a theft of any kind are surely going to report it to police agency without being told by state government.

Protective orders — There is already an order to have weapons to be confiscated by court order of judges. It is under their discretion when or if ever to return the weapons to the defendant.

Then the bill would have the insane person take all his guns to the sheriff's office for storage. How crazy would this be? Now you have the sheriff in the storage business.

Criminal purchases — Means before you sell or give a gun to someone you would have to do a background check, which an average citizen cannot do.

What David doesn't understand is that there are laws on the books stating a convicted felon cannot own or be in possession of a rifle or a pistol.

In my opinion, it is none of Rep. Watkins' business if I own a gun.

If I may, I suggest he spend more time on the state budget, which is out of control.

Why are we targeted by smelter bill?

By Bernie Hayes
Special to The Gleaner

Just like politicians to weigh in without the facts.

Tommy Thompson and Joe Bowen have taken steps to prove they are true politicians instead of being reasonable representative of the people they serve. Tommy has introduced HB211 and Joe SB71, in their respective bodies of government. These bills provide for the aluminum smelters, Century Aluminum of Hawesville and Rio Tinto Alcan of Sebree, to not only purchase their power from the open market (which Big Rivers Electric has agreed to in principle), but to require the customers of Meade County RECC, Jackson Purchase Electric Corp. and Kenergy to subsidize incremental costs associated with the smelters intent to purchase market power.

Why are they targeting the rural customers in such a way? Do they think the rural customers have more money than the aluminum smelters? Or do they think the rural customers don't vote? Why don't they just have the members of the Kentucky House and Senate foot the bill, if it's no big deal?

This is the first time in my memory that I've ever heard of a class of customers of a utility, or any business, being discriminatingly imposed upon by the legislature.

If they want to pass a tax on ALL Kentuckians to subsidize the aluminum smelters, they can bring that before the House and Senate and see where it goes.

But if the 4.5 million people in Kentucky think that's too much of an increase in taxes, what do you think the 112,000 customers of Big Rivers are going to see? About 50 times as much, with no benefit or even any guarantee that the smelters won't be back in two years looking for more or closing their plants in spite of the concessions made by "these trusting souls."

I understand that the jobs are important in Western Kentucky. I have one, for as long as it might last. I work for Big Rivers Electric and have for almost 30 years. Now I'm being told that if the smelters go to the open market, which is in direct conflict with the contract they signed with Big Rivers, Big Rivers will be forced to lay off about 100 people and idle a plant. Now if that's what has to happen, I and Big Rivers will come to grips with that reality and carry on our lives in some way.

But to tell me that I am losing my job, and, "Oh, by the way, you get to pay the electric bill for the smelters that put you out of work by violating their contract," that's a hard pill to swallow. The smelters should be accountable for any incremental costs incurred as result of their load, NOT the unwilling electric rate payers from Kenergy, JPEC, MCRECC.

Big Rivers has always done its best to keep costs down and minimize the effect of its costs on the consumers. We have some of the lowest electric rates in the country. Yes, they are increasing, due mostly to the regulations of government. This is not a cost that the utility can control; the elected officials are driving these increases.

But with the smelters leaving and the customers being saddled with the incremental costs that are a direct result of the smelter load, rates could increase dramatically. So much for bringing new jobs to Kentucky; no business will settle in an area with excessive electric rates.

I also am served by Kenergy and have been through most of the 30 years I've worked here. They have to justify before the Public Service Commission any increase that they request.

Now the legislature is going to pass a rate increase to Big Rivers' customers without any hearings or due process to the customers?

Please contact your Kentucky state senator and representative and tell them that this is bad policy, unfair to the electric customers of Western Kentucky, and will keep Kentucky's economy in the tank for years to come.

Watkins acting against gun owners' interests

By The Rev. Dean Spooner
Special to The Gleaner

Across our nation, those in government have erupted in an orgy of anti-gun legislative moves. These lawmakers are seeking to redefine the rights of law-abiding citizens in an assault against the Constitution, which they, by the way, have sworn an oath to uphold.

This is even happening in Kentucky, and Henderson County's state Rep. David Watkins has stepped boldly into the fray. Watkins has co-sponsored House Bill 265. You can read this legislation by going to www.lrc.ky.gov and searching HB 265.

This bill would define an assault weapon to include semi-automatic rifles, shotguns and pistols. This bill would create a personal registry by the state of every gun owned and purchased, as well as purchased ammunition.

If some thug should steal your weapons and you do not report that crime within 24 hours to the authorities, Dr. Watkins thinks you should be subject to a felony.

Yes, that's right, Dr. Watkins thinks you, the victim of a crime, should be subject to a felony charge!

In fact, according to Rep. David Watkins' bill, a Kentuckian would be subject to a Class D felony if a gun owner in Kentucky did not store his firearms in a way acceptable to the state, if one did not properly register one's guns, if one sold a gun to one's neighbor without getting a background check, if one's guns were not voluntarily surrendered when one was made subject to an order of protection, and on and on ...

Oh, yes, and let's not miss this one: "Any person who possesses an unregistered assault weapon (see definition above) or large capacity ammunition-feeding device in violation of the administrative regulation promulgated under this subsection shall be guilty of a Class D felony."

David Watkins' bill would also repeal KRS 65.870. That is the current law which caused the Henderson City Commission to recently recant on their presumed gun control efforts, which they had launched fast and furious in January, just a couple weeks after each of them had sworn a public oath at their installation to uphold the Constitution.

Repealing this particular law would leave every county, city and town in Kentucky to make their own unique gun laws infringing upon the Second Amendment; such that it would be near impossible for a law-abiding gun owner to travel.

How do you like Dr. Watkins' gun control prescription, Henderson? I urge you to go and read HB 265 and read what Rep. Watkins is up to! Apparently he thinks he knows better than the Bill of Rights. He is all too ready to infringe upon your rights and redefine them according to his opinions.

But he has forgotten that the Bill of Rights are our civil rights! I say, it is high time for a retirement party for Rep. David Watkins. How is David Watkins' representation working for you, Henderson?

Soldier gets support on leaks

By Ben Nuckols
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — While it may be a curious legal strategy, an Army private's decision to admit in court that he sent hundreds of thousands of classified documents to WikiLeaks has energized his supporters around the world.

Pfc. Bradley Manning, 25, has been called by some a whistle-blowing hero, a political prisoner and a symbol of the misplaced priorities of the U.S. military and the Obama administration.

Others, particularly in the United States, view him as a traitor. Regardless of his motives, he appears likely to spend many years in a military prison.

At the very least, Manning likely ended speculation that he leaked the largest trove of classified material in U.S. history wantonly or unknowingly.

At a court hearing Thursday, Manning read a 35-page statement describing his internal deliberations about whether to send the first batch of hundreds of thousands of battlefield reports from Iraq and Afghanistan.

He said he was trying to expose the American military's disregard for human life and provoke a public debate about U.S. military and foreign policy.

"I felt this sense of relief by them having it," Manning said Thursday of WikiLeaks.

Jeff Paterson of the Bradley Manning Support Network, which has raised more than $900,000 for Manning's legal defense, said the statement confirmed what supporters have long thought of him.

"We've been defending this person as a heroic whistle-blower for 2 1/2 years now, and it was inspiring and it was motivating to finally hear in his own words why he made this life-changing and possibly history-changing decision," Paterson said.

Manning said he didn't think the material would harm the United States, although the diplomatic cables would be embarrassing.

The Obama administration has said it threatened valuable military and diplomatic sources and strained relations with other governments.

Manning's supporters say the documents exposed war crimes.

They also credit a State Department cable indicating that the U.S. would not back former Tunisian president Zine El Abidine Ben Ali with helping spark the pro-democracy Arab Spring uprisings in 2010.

Space capsule seems to be fixed

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A commercial craft carrying a ton of supplies for the International Space Station ran into thruster trouble shortly after liftoff Friday. Flight controllers managed to gain control, but were forced to delay its arrival at the orbiting lab.

The earliest the Dragon capsule could show up is Sunday, a full day late, said top officials for NASA and the private company SpaceX.

"We're definitely not going to rush it," said SpaceX's billionaire founder Elon Musk. "We want to make sure first and foremost that things are safe before proceeding."

The Dragon, owned and operated by SpaceX, holds considerable science experiments for the International Space Station as well as food and spare parts.

Musk said six hours into the flight that all four sets of thrusters finally were working properly. "All systems green," he reported via Twitter. The problem might have been caused by a stuck valve or line blockage. The thrusters are small rockets used for maneuvering the capsule.

It is the first serious trouble to strike a Dragon in orbit. None of the three previous flights had any signs of thruster issues, Musk told reporters by phone from company headquarters in Hawthorne, Calif.

He said it appeared to be a glitch versus a major concern.

NASA space station program manager Mike Suffredini said at least three groups of thrusters on the Dragon need to work before the capsule can come close to the complex. That's a safety rule that will not be waived, Suffredini said.

President pardons minor criminals

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama on Friday issued pardons for 17 people, largely for minor offenses.

Those receiving pardons came from 13 states and had been sentenced for crimes that included falsely altering a money order, unauthorized acquisition of food stamps, drug violations, and possession of an unregistered firearm.

No one well-known was on the list released by the White House. Some of the crimes drew light penalties in the first place — such as a North Carolina woman sentenced to two years' probation and 100 hours of community service for distributing satellite cable decryption devices.

A dozen of the 17 had been on probation. The other five had been sentenced to prison terms ranging from 54 days to five years.

The White House offered no details on why these people were selected by Obama, who has issued relatively few pardons.

Agent: Valle didn't enjoy cannibal fable

NEW YORK — A New York City police officer told investigators after his arrest that his online chats about cannibalism set him on a downward spiral that was wrecking his personal life, an FBI agent testified Friday.

Gilberto Valle "claimed he did not enjoy it and he did not know why he was doing it," agent Anthony Foto told jurors at Valle's federal trial in Manhattan.

The testimony came as the government winds down its case against the 28-year-old officer. Valle contends that it was all fantasy and that he intended no harm.

Word 'pimp' sparks fight in Zumba trial

ALFRED — The lead investigator in the case against an insurance agent accused of helping a fitness instructor use a Zumba studio as a front for prostitution testified Friday that she concluded early in her investigation that a "pimp" was calling the shots.

Officer Audra Presby said she also realized she was in over her head and needed extra help.

The Kennebunk police officer told jurors hearing the case against Mark Strong Sr. that she felt someone other than dance instructor Alexis Wright was controlling the operation.

The word "pimp" was a key source of disagreement in the trial Friday, with the defense arguing that Strong didn't profit from Wright's activities.

Dashboard camera gets Strip shooting

LAS VEGAS — A video camera on a taxi dashboard captured a black Range Rover and a Maserati sports car weaving around each other during a shooting that left an aspiring rapper and two other people dead in a spectacular crash on the Las Vegas Strip, a police report states.

The report was released after Ammar Harris, 26, a self-described pimp, was arrested Thursday in Los Angeles, ending a multistate manhunt.

The report doesn't say what sparked the shooting that led to the fiery crash at the intersection where the Bellagio, Bally's, Flamingo and Caesars Palace casino resorts are located.

Syrian rebel chief: Fighters need weapons, not bandages

By Zeina Karam
Associated Press

BEIRUT — The head of Syria's rebels said Friday that the food and medical supplies the United States plans to give his fighters for the first time won't bring them any closer to defeating President Bashar Assad's forces in the country's civil war.

"We don't want food and drink, and we don't want bandages. When we're wounded, we want to die. The only thing we want is weapons," Gen. Salim Idris, chief of staff of the opposition's Supreme Military Council, told The Associated Press by telephone.

The former brigadier in Assad's army warned that the world's failure to provide heavier arms is only prolonging the nearly 2-year-old uprising that has killed an estimated 70,000 people.

In what was described as a significant policy shift, the Obama administration said Thursday it was giving an additional $60 million in assistance to Syria's political opposition and said it would, for the first time, provide nonlethal aid directly to rebels battling to topple Assad.

The move was announced by U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry at an international conference on Syria in Rome. In the coming days, several European nations are expected to take similar steps in working with the military wing of the opposition to increase pressure on Assad to step down and pave the way for a democratic transition.

But the frustration expressed by Idris is shared by most of his colleagues in the Syrian opposition, as well as by scores of rebels fighting in Syria.

The main rebel units, known together as the Free Syrian Army, regrouped in December under a unified, Western-backed command headed by Idris and called the Supreme Military Council, following promises of more military assistance once a central council was in place. Despite those pledges, opposition members say little has been delivered in terms of financial aid, and more importantly, in weapons and ammunition.

The international community remains reluctant to send weapons, fearing they may fall into the hands of extremists increasingly gaining ground among the rebels.

Mouaz al-Khatib, the leader of the Syrian opposition coalition, has lamented the West's focus on the presence of Islamic militants among the fighters. In a forceful speech Thursday to the Rome conference, he said the media reports give "more attention to the length of fighters' beards than to the (regime's) massacres."

Chad's president: Warlord killed

By Dany Padire and Angela Charlton
Associated Press

N'DJAMENA, Chad — Chadian President Idriss Deby announced Friday that Chadian troops fighting to dislodge an al-Qaida affiliate in northern Mali killed one of the group's leading commanders, Abou Zeid.

The death of the Algerian warlord, a feared radical leader of al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb behind the kidnapping of several Westerners, could not immediately be verified. His death would be a big blow to his group and its growing influence in North and West Africa.

Officials in Mali and in France, which is leading an international military intervention in Mali against Islamic extremists linked to AQIM, could not confirm the death. The White House had no immediate reaction to the announcement. The U.S. has offered drones and intelligence help to the French-led operation.

The Chadian president's spokesman said that Deby announced the death of Abou Zeid during a ceremony Friday for Chadian soldiers killed in fighting in Mali.

Deby said, "It was our soldiers who killed two big Islamist chiefs in northern Mali," including Abou Zeid, according to the spokesman.

The spokesman insisted on anonymity because he was not authorized to speak before an announcement on state TV. It was unclear when that was expected.

Poll: 87 percent say never OK to cheat on taxes

JAE C. HONG / ASSOCIATED PRESS

Zidkijah Zabad advertises for Liberty Tax Service in January in Los Angeles. With tax season in full swing, a poll says an overwhelming majority of adults don't believe it is ever OK to cheat on their taxes, with most citing personal integrity.

By Stephen Olmacher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With tax season in full swing, a newly released poll says an overwhelming majority of adults don't believe it is ever OK to cheat on their income taxes, with most citing personal integrity as a reason to be truthful.

When asked how much, if any, is an acceptable amount to cheat on your income taxes, 87 percent of respondents said, "not at all." Only 11 percent said, "a little here and there" or "as much as possible."

Ninety-five percent said personal integrity influences them to honestly report their taxes, while 63 percent said fear of an audit did. Only 41 percent said they are honest because they believe their neighbors are, too.

The telephone poll of 1,500 randomly chosen adults was sponsored by the Internal Revenue Service Oversight Board, which released the findings Tuesday. The findings are in line with previous surveys done by the board.

Board Chairman Paul Cherecwich Jr. noted the importance of honesty in a tax system that asks people to report their own financial information. There are many backstops in the system, with employers and financial institutions also reporting taxpayer information to the IRS. But the IRS only audits 1 percent of individual returns each year, according to agency statistics.

"Personal integrity is at the core of our self-assessment tax system," Cherecwich said. "The overwhelming majority of American taxpayers play by the rules and expect everyone else to do the same."

Forty-three percent said they think the IRS maintains a proper balance between tax enforcement and taxpayer service; 30 percent said they think the agency devotes too many resources to enforcement.

"The vast majority of people, I think, don't even have an opportunity to cheat on their taxes," said Maresca, an associate law professor at Fordham University.

"They are so limited in what they can do and take and what breaks they are entitled to. You can't pretend that you have a kid you don't have. You can't claim your dog."

Coca-Cola CEO earns $21.6 million

Coca-Cola Co. gave Chairman and CEO Muhtar Kent a pay package worth $21.6 million last year, as the world's biggest beverage maker navigated shifting drinking habits in the U.S. and sold more of its drinks overseas.

The compensation is up from the $21.2 million Kent received in 2011, according to an Associated Press analysis.

Best Buy narrows loss in 4th quarter

Best Buy Co. lost less money in the fourth quarter as efforts by new CEO Hubert Joly to make the company more efficient showed glimmers of paying off.

The struggling electronics chain also said Friday that it did not receive a buyout bid from its co-founder Richard Schulze by the deadline Thursday, ending one question mark that had been hovering over the company.

The retailer's fourth-quarter results beat expectations, but Best Buy gave a cautious outlook on the first quarter because it is ramping up investments and the timing of some sales has changed from last year.

Whiskey spill sends Scotch into sewer

A massive spill at a Chivas plant has sent the smell of spirits flowing through a Scottish sewer and sorrow coursing through the hearts of Scotch whiskey fans.

Chivas Brothers Ltd. spokeswoman Jennifer Stevenson says the group is investigating what she described as an "accidental loss" of spirit at the company's bottling plant in Dumbarton, Scotland on Feb. 26.

She declined to estimate how much of the bulk whiskey had been lost, saying only that it was less than the 18,000 liters (4,755 gallons) mentioned in media reports.

Automakers report sales up in February

Americans want new cars and trucks, and they're not going to let higher gas prices or political dysfunction in Washington stand in their way.

General Motors, Toyota, Ford and most other automakers posted at least modest sales gains for February. Industry analysts estimate last month's sales rose about 7 percent from a year earlier as pent-up demand and cheap financing kept the U.S. auto sales recovery powering along.

GM sales rose 7 percent, while Ford's increased 9 percent. Chrysler and Volkswagen also reported increases, but both slowed from the torrid pace of the past two years. Chrysler sales were up 4 percent over a year earlier, while VW sales were up 3 percent. Toyota sales were up just over 4 percent, while Hyundai and Honda each had 2 percent gains.

Of the major automakers, only Nissan was down. Its sales were off almost 7 percent from a record February of 2012.

CLERMONT, KY.

Jim Beam dips into white whiskey

The world's largest bourbon producer is dipping into moonshining's past to create its own batches of white whiskey.

Beam Inc.'s newest spirit is called Jacob's Ghost in honor of Jacob Beam, founding distiller of its flagship Jim Beam brand. Jacob's Ghost resembles the potent concoction that flowed from the pioneering whiskey-maker's still in the 1790s or from a moonshiner's still today.

But this is no run-of-the-mill hooch brewed in the backwoods.

"We have perfected the whiskey recipe that Jacob created," said Jim Beam master distiller Fred Noe, a descendant of Jacob Beam. "Jacob's Ghost is not a moonshine."

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

CHICAGO — Grains futures mostly rose Friday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Wheat for May delivery rose 6 cents to $7.2050 a bushel; May corn rose 5 cents to $7.0850 a bushel; May oats rose 2.50 cents to $3.7975 a bushel; while May soybeans fell 8.75 cents to $14.4350 a bushel.

Beef and pork futures were mixed on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

April live cattle added 0.10 cent to $1.2995 a pound; March feeder cattle fell 0.45 cent to $1.4155 a pound; April lean hogs rose 0.12 cent at 81.12 cents a pound.

COMMODITIES

Copper fell to its lowest in more than three months following a slowdown in growth in Chinese manufacturing.

The May contract for copper fell 4.65 cents, or 1.3 percent, to $3.5010 per pound. The metal is trading at its lowest since November and has slumped 7.4 percent since Feb. 1.

China is the world's largest consumer of copper, and signs that Chinese demand may slow typically push the metal's price lower.

The price of copper, which has many industrial uses, tends to track the outlook for global economic growth. A survey released Friday suggested continued weakness in European manufacturing, which also weighed on copper prices.

A significant build-up of inventories is also hurting prices, said Edward Meir, a senior commodities analyst at INTL FCStone.

In other metals trading, gold, palladium and platinum also fell. Silver bucked the trend and edged higher after losing almost 3 percent in the previous two days of trading.

The lure of precious metals as an alternative investment has waned this year as the stock market has rallied and the dollar has strengthened.

Commodities are typically priced in dollars and as the currency rallies, producers demand fewer dollars for their output. The dollar index, which measures the strength of the U.S. currency against a basket of currencies, has risen 4 percent in the last month.

Gold for April delivery fell $5.80, or 0.4 percent, to $1,572.30 an ounce. Palladium for June delivery dropped $14.50, or 1.9 percent, to $702.40 an ounce and platinum for April fell $10, or 0.6 percent, to $1,573.50 an ounce. Silver for May edged higher, gaining 5.8 cents, or 0.2 percent, to $28.49 an ounce.

In agricultural commodities trading, wheat and corn rose, and soybeans fell.

Wheat for May delivery rose 6 cents to $7.2050 a bushel, corn for the same month rose 5 cents to $7.085 a bushel.

May soybeans fell 8.75 cents to $14.435 a bushel.

In energy trading, oil fell to its lowest level of the year. Benchmark crude for April delivery fell $1.37 to close at $90.68 a barrel.

Wholesale gasoline was up 1.69 cents to $3.1286 a gallon. Heating oil fell 3 cents to 2.9301 a gallon. Natural gas fell 3 cents to finish at $3.456 per 1,000 cubic feet.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY: By Gary Puryear
"I WILL GO WITH YOU"
One of the many Abraham Lincoln stories that have been told as true relates a day Lincoln went down to the slave block in Washington D.C. during the war. He saw a girl being sold. He took money out of his pocket and bought her. Then he said to her, "Young lady, you are free." She said, "Please sir, what does that mean?" Lincoln said, "It means you are free." She asked, "Does that mean that I can say whatever I want to say?" He answered, "Yes. You can say whatever you want to say." She asked, "Does that mean I can be whatever I want to be?" He replied, "Yes, it means you can be whatever you want to be." She asked, "Does that mean I can go wherever I want to go?" He said, "Yes, you can go wherever you want to go." And the girl with tears streaming down her face, said, "Then I will go with you." This excerpt was taken from "House to House/Heart to Heart Volume 17, Number 6. Upon reading this I realized in some ways it describes our freedom in Christ. Jesus died for our sins, and by his blood we are set free from our sins when contacted by our burial in water (baptism) (Revelation 1:5; I Peter 1:19; 3:21). Having been bought by Christ's blood we are now made free from sin and have become the servants of righteousness (Romans 6:18). Like the slave girl in the story of Lincoln we should gladly say to our Lord, "I will go with you." This answers the charge Jesus made to his disciples when he said, "Follow me" (Matthew 9:9).

States scratching for unclaimed lottery cash

■ Millions in abandoned funds could fill variety of budget holes

By Michael Brick
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas – So a guy walks into a gas station, buys a scratch-off, wins a few bucks, gets distracted with some fool thing and eventually puts the lucky ticket through the wash in his Wranglers. It happens. No big deal.

But for state lawmakers in a tough budget year nationwide, the unclaimed prizes are adding up to a tempting pot of cash.

"It's something we've seen an increased interest in this year," said Jon Griffin, a policy associate at the National Conference of State Legislatures in Washington.

Around the world, some staggeringly huge jackpots have gone unclaimed in recent years, drawing lots of headlines and more than a few schemes. In 2011, a $77 million Powerball winner let the 180-day deadline expire in Georgia. In California last year, a woman claimed her $23 million prize only after state officials put on a five-month publicity campaign to find the missing winner. In Illinois, officials are still searching for the holder of a $1 million ticket set to expire on March 17. And in Britain, seven prizes worth $1.3 million each are set to expire between March and July.

After the prize deadlines lapse — usually within a year, sometimes in as few as 90 days — lottery commissions generally put the money toward future prizes or general state revenues.

For the most part, those policies have remained unchanged since the 1960s, when the modern state lottery movement spread from New Hampshire.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Julie Cervera holds a $23 million dollar prize banner at the California Lottery's office on Nov. 2. The 69-year-old California grandmother came forward to claim a $23 million lottery jackpot after the winning ticket languished in her car's glove compartment for months. For state lawmakers in a budget crunch, the unclaimed prizes are adding up to a tempting pot of cash.

"It was all divided up in terms of who gets the profit," said I. Nelson Rose, a gambling industry expert at Whittier Law School in California. "They didn't think about what's left over unclaimed."

Now, they are officially thinking about it.

In Albany, for example, a New York Senate committee is considering a proposal to transfer unclaimed prizes to a summer reading program known as the Love Your Library Fund.

In Wyoming, where lawmakers are trying to start a new state lottery agency, the unclaimed prize money has become the subject of an intricate power squabble. Members have been shading the prize legislation to change which agencies controlled the money and whose pet causes would benefit, from gambling addiction programs to assorted social needs or maladies.

In Texas, where even a big oil boom has not quite rescued the budget from troubles including a $4.7 billion debt to Medicaid, the unclaimed prize money seems to fit that name less and less every year.

Over the past decade, the amount has been going up, peaking at $86 million in 2010.

As the pool of cash expanded, the state developed a complex formula allowing appropriations for teaching hospitals, veterans' services and health care in border counties.

Other proposals met resistance. In 2005, one unsuccessful bill would have paid $50,000 to the families of Texas soldiers killed in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Last year, the lottery commission reported unclaimed prizes of $52 million, including $35.6 million from instant games and $16.7 million from draw games.

Though the total amounts to less than a rounding error in the state's proposed two-year budget of $88.9 billion, some strikingly diverse parties have emerged to compete for the money.

"Something like $50 million will get the legislators nuts, because they can all sense, 'That's what a school costs in my district or a bridge or a road," said William Thompson, an expert on gambling industry regulation at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas.

To Democratic Rep. Trey Martinez Fischer of San Antonio, $50 million means a chance to send some resources back to the original stated beneficiary of the state lottery, the public schools. His bill would send more to supplement school districts with low property tax revenues.

"We're still dealing with $5.4 billion in cuts that (were) imposed by the Republican leadership," Martinez Fischer said. "I think every dollar we can find should be going to educate our schoolchildren."

Democratic Sen. Wendy Davis of Fort Worth also kept her request on the modest side. Her bill would stake out $5 million for military veterans' health and education services. Under the current formula, those programs get a maximum of $5 million.

So far, the boldest proposal would carve out $10 million a year to restore the Battleship Texas, which is anchored at the San Jacinto Battleground in the Houston Ship Channel and draws 100,000 visitors annually.

Bruce Bramlett, executive director of a nonprofit foundation devoted to preservation of the ship, said leaks in the ship, which was commissioned in 1914, have caused damage requiring $75 million in repairs.

He said the idea of tapping unclaimed lottery money occurred to him, though he has done little to promote the proposal publicly.

Republican Rep. Wayne Smith of Baytown, who filed the measure, expressed little surprise at the emergence of competition for the unclaimed prize money.

Referring to other lawmakers with rival bills, he added, "maybe they did their research too."

Poker rooms folding across U.S. as the game loses its hold on players

By Hannah Dreier
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS – The Tropicana hoped to step back into the big leagues when it opened its poker room in the heart of the Las Vegas Strip, touting it as the coolest in town.

But that same morning, federal agents shut down the three biggest online poker sites on the Internet. Last September, less than a year and a half later, the iconic casino quietly swapped out its green felt tables for slot machines.

It's a story that's become increasingly common as the crackdown on Internet gambling weakens pokers' appeal, and the casinos that once competed to lure fans of Texas Hold 'Em abandon the waning game in favor of more lucrative alternatives.

Poker has never been a big moneymaker like slot machines or roulette. But when the game's popularity soared during the 2000s, casinos were willing to forgo the extra dollars to get players inside their buildings.

Now the calculus is shifting. In Sin City, epicenter of the poker craze, at least eight rooms have folded in the past two years. The trend is also playing out in Mississippi riverboats, Indian casinos and gambling halls near big cities from California to Florida.

Poker's proponents insist the game remains as popular as ever, and some larger casinos say their rooms are bustling.

In a statement this month announcing the World Series of Poker lineup, executive director Ty Stewart said the summer bonanza in Las Vegas would be an "affirmation about the strength and global appeal of the game."

But the spate of poker room closures on the Strip has some wondering whether the largest gambling trend to sweep the country in 25 years may be losing momentum.

"I just think the allure of poker is lessening," said William Thompson, author of the encyclopedia "Gambling in America" and professor of public administration at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. "That's one reason the smaller casinos would just say, 'Hey it's not worth all the time to set everything up. A slot machine would do a lot better.'"

Poker revenue has been falling in Nevada since 2007, the year after the federal government first cracked down on virtual gambling and forced online companies to close or relocate offshore.

The recession hobbled casinos across the board, but while winnings from other games began to pick back up in 2010, poker revenue continues to slump by an average of 6 percent a year, according to annual reports from the state Gaming Control Board.

Poker revenues stacked up to $123 million last year, down from a high of $168 million in 2007.

Entries in the World Series of Poker's main event also took a tumble in 2007, falling by 28 percent from a high of 8,773. Entries have only topped 7,000 once in the years since.

On April 15, 2011, the federal government took its strongest stand yet against the semi-legal world of internet poker, blacking out three major sites on a date later dubbed "Black Friday."

The Tropicana hotel-resort, which was remaking itself with several major renovations at the time, opened its new poker room the same spring day.

"Poker had gone through a dramatic popularity phase. It grew really quickly. And we jumped on board," said Fred Harmon, chief marketing officer for the casino that sits on a busy Strip intersection opposite the MGM Grand and New York New York.

The decision to replace the room with slot machines last fall was pure economics, Harmon said.

Casinos across the country are making the same calculation. Sam's Town in Tunica, Mississippi, closed its poker room in January, citing the economy. The Seminole Casino Hollywood near Fort Lauderdale, Fla., replaced its room with slots in September.

Indian casinos in states like Minnesota and the Dakotas are also pulling their rooms, according to marketing consultant Theron "Scarlet Raven" Thompson.

"What you're seeing is the mom and pop-sized poker rooms are closing. The larger properties are monopolizing the poker crowd," he said.

Poker has never been a high-profit game for casinos is because players exchange money with each other, not the house. Rooms must employ a dealer for every table and can only collect portion of what players put down, usually about 5 percent.

The game's meteoric run is generally attributed to the rise of Internet gambling, new technology that let viewers see player's hidden cards in televised tournaments and a watershed moment during the 2003 World Series of Poker when an amateur with the unlikely name Chris Moneymaker claimed the $2.5 million first prize in front of a million viewers.

After Moneymaker's win, the MGM Grand reopened its poker room, which had been closed for years.

In the end, the very thing that made poker so appealing — its air of tradition and class — may be its undoing. After all, casinos make their billions by giving people new and stimulating ways to lose money.

Players compete during the World Series of Poker at the Rio hotel and casino in Las Vegas on May 31, 2011. Las Vegas once couldn't get enough of poker rooms. Now those rooms are folding.

While slot machine developers can roll out a new "Family Guy" or "oodles of poodles" game ever few months, poker remains unchanged.

St. The property will be used as back parking for the adjacent E-Z Shop at U.S. 41-South and Clay Street.

Crown Castle received a $20,000 permit from the county for upgrading a cell tower for Sprint on Baskett Cemetery Road.

During the first two months of this year, the construction value of building permits issued here totaled nearly $1.9 million, down from more than $2.8 million during the same period last year.

They have issued permits for two new single-family homes — but none during February — down from eight during the first two months last year.

However, the city issued a $25,000 to Ershico LLC for the footers for what is to become a 22-unit apartment building at 2649 Stadium Drive.

BUDGET
from 1A

Republicans said they wanted deficit cuts, too, but not tax increases. "The president got his tax hikes on Jan. 1," House Speaker John Boehner told reporters, a reference to a $600 billion increase on higher wage earners that cleared Congress on the first day of the year. Now, he said after the meeting, it is time take on "the spending problem here in Washington."

Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky was equally emphatic. " I will not be part of any back-room deal, and I will absolutely not agree to increase taxes," he vowed in a written statement.

At the same time they clashed, Obama and Republicans appeared determined to contain their disagreement.

Boehner said the House will pass legislation next week to extend routine funding for government agencies beyond the current March 27 expiration. "I'm hopeful that we won't have to deal with the threat of a government shutdown while we're dealing with the sequester at the same time," he said, referring to the new cuts by their Washington-speak name.

Obama said he, too, wanted to keep the two issues separate.

White House officials declined to say precisely when the president would formally order the cuts. Under the law, he had until midnight. Barring a quick deal in the next week or so to call them off, the impact eventually is likely to be felt in all reaches of the country.

The Pentagon will absorb half of the $85 billion required to be sliced between now and the end of the budget year on Sept 30, exposing civilian workers to furloughs and defense contractors to possible cancellations. Said Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel, only a few days on the job: "We will continue to ensure America's security" despite the challenge posed by an "unnecessary budget crisis."

The administration also has warned of long lines at airports as security personnel are furloughed, of teacher layoffs in some classrooms and adverse impacts on maintenance at the nation's parks.

The announcement by the housing agency in Seattle was an early indication of what is likely to hit as the cuts take effect. It said it was taking the action "to cope with the impending reduction in federal funding," adding that it normally issues 45 to 50 vouchers per month.

After days of dire warnings by administration officials, the president told reporters the effects of the cuts would be felt only gradually.

"The longer these cuts remain in place, the greater the damage to our economy — a slow grind that will intensify with each passing day," he said. Much of the budget savings will come through unpaid furloughs for government workers, and those won't begin taking effect until next month.

Obama declined to say if he bore any of the responsibility for the coming cuts, and expressed bemusement at any suggestion he had the ability to force Republicans to agree with him.

"I am not a dictator. I'm the president," he said. "So, ultimately, if Mitch McConnell or John Boehner say we need to go to catch a plane, I can't have Secret Service block the doorway, right?" He also declared he couldn't perform a "Jedi mind meld" to sway opponents, mixing Star Wars and Star Trek as he reached for a science fiction metaphor.

Neither the president nor Republicans claimed to like what was about to happen. Obama called the cuts "dumb," and GOP lawmakers have long said they were his idea in the first place.

Ironically, they derive from a budget dispute they were supposed to help resolve back in the fall of 2011. At the time, a congressional Supercommittee was charged with identifying at least $1.2 trillion in deficit savings over a decade as part of an attempt to avoid a first-ever government default. The president and Republicans agreed to create a fallback of that much in across-the-board cuts, designed to be so unpalatable that it would virtually assure the panel struck a deal.

The Supercommittee dissolved in disagreement, though. And while Obama and Republicans agreed to a two-month delay last January, there was no bipartisan negotiation in recent days to prevent the first installment of the cuts from taking effect.

It isn't clear how long they will last.

Of particular concern to lawmakers in both parties is a lack of flexibility in the allocation of cuts due to take effect over the next few months.

That problem will ease beginning with the new budget year on Oct. 1, when Congress and the White House will be able to negotiate changes in the way the reductions are made.

For his part, Obama suggested he was content to leave them in place until Republicans change their minds about raising taxes by closing loopholes.

"If Congress comes to its senses a week from now, a month from now, three months from now, then there's a lot of open running room there for us to grow our economy much more quickly and to advance the agenda of the American people dramatically," he said.

"So this is a temporary stop on what I believe is the long-term, outstanding prospect for American growth and greatness."

But Republicans say they are on solid political ground. At a retreat in January in Williamsburg, Va., GOP House members reversed course and decided to approve a debt limit increase without demanding cuts.

They also agreed not to provoke a government shutdown, another traditional pressure point, as leverage to force Obama and Democrats to accept savings in benefit programs like Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security.

Obama has said repeatedly he's willing to include benefit programs in deficit-cutting legislation — as long as more tax revenue is part of the deal.

"I am prepared to do hard things and to push my Democratic friends to do hard things," he said at the White House on Friday.

Republicans speak dismissively of such pledges, saying that in earlier negotiations, the president has never been willing to close a deal with the type of changes he often says he will accept.

Sinkhole swallows man, furniture in Florida home

■ 37-year-old presumed dead

The Associated Press

SEFFNER, Fla. – In a matter of seconds, the earth opened under Jeff Bush's bedroom and swallowed him up like something out of a horror movie. About the only thing left was the TV cable running down into the hole.

Jeff Bush

Bush, 37, was presumed dead Friday, the victim of a sinkhole — a hazard so common in Florida that state law requires home insurers to provide coverage against the danger.

The sinkhole, estimated at 20 feet across and 20 feet deep, caused the home's concrete floor to cave in around 11 p.m. Thursday as everyone in the Tampa-area house was turning in for the night. It gave way with a loud crash that sounded like a car hitting the house and brought Bush's brother running.

Jeremy Bush said he jumped into the hole but couldn't see his brother and had to be rescued himself by a sheriff's deputy who reached out and pulled him to safety as the ground crumbled around him.

"The floor was still giving in and the dirt was still going down, but I didn't care. I wanted to save my brother," Jeremy Bush said through tears Friday in a neighbor's yard. "But I just couldn't do nothing."

He added: "I could swear I heard him hollering my name to help him."

Officials lowered equipment into the sinkhole and saw no signs of life, said Hillsborough County Fire Rescue spokeswoman Jessica Damico.

A dresser and the TV set had vanished down the hole, along with most of Bush's bed.

"All I could see was the cable wire running from the TV going down into the hole. I saw a corner of the bed and a corner of the box spring and the frame of the bed," Jeremy Bush said.

At a news conference Friday night, county administrator Mike Merrill described the home as "seriously unstable." He said no one can go in the home because officials were afraid of another collapse and losing more lives. The soil around the home was very soft and the sinkhole was expected to grow.

Engineers said they may have to demolish the small, sky-blue house, even though from the outside there appeared to be nothing wrong with the four-bedroom, concrete-wall structure, built in 1974.

"I cannot tell you why it has not collapsed yet," said Bill Bracken, the owner of engineering company called on to assess the sinkhole and home.

Engineers said there was an initial collapse followed by another one a short time later. The hole was 15 feet deep but grew to about 25 feet deep, and it was about 20 feet to 30 feet across.

Jeremy Bush said someone came out to the home a couple of months ago to check for sinkholes and other things, apparently for insurance purposes.

"He said there was nothing wrong with the house. Nothing. And a couple of months later, my brother dies. In a sinkhole," Bush said.

cards or plastic rooms keys, empty water bottles, plastic shopping bags and even bicycle chain.

"I saw a cute outfit where someone took bath scrubbies and used them in a Parisian-style outfit," Littrell said. "Really there are all kinds of things people can use. I just want people to be brave enough to try it."

Other examples might include aluminum, newspaper, shower curtain rings, old sheets, old tarp, plastic flowers, old vinyl records, vcr or cassette tape, sponges, wooden utensils ..." just about anything that could go into a landfill."

The DHP stated it this way in a news release about the show: "It is a fun way to raise awareness about recycling and our limited landfill space while sparking the creativity and playfulness in all of us. What a great way to make us all aware of just how much less we could be throwing away."

Prizes also will be awarded: $500 and $250 cash in both the adult (18 and older) and teen (ages 13-17) divisions and four passes to Holiday World in the children's division (ages 9-12). There also will be a $100 People's Choice Award.

Trashion fashion designers have until Tuesday to let show organizers know that they intend to participate.

Participants should contact Studio 421 at 270-748-0359 or by email at studio421henderson@gmail.com. The studio also is accessible through Facebook.

Designers will then need to submit their sketches and materials list by March 20. These must pass the judges' approval for tastefulness and wearability. Once submitted and approved, they can be constructed. The designer can choose to wear and model the outfit on the runways themselves or they can have someone else do the modeling.

Participants will be judged on originality, wearability, difficulty of construction and best use of materials.

The winning designs will be featured in the Studio 421 display window after the Trashion Show.

Littrell said she first became aware of the Trashion Show concept when she was traveling last fall and there was a video in her hotel room about such an event that took place in the city she was visiting.

"I was fascinated by it," she said. "I thought it was something edgy that would appeal to young people. And I thought it would be a great tie-in to Earth Day."

PLANNING

Company officials have indicated they intend to install a silencer on the fan, which will make it quieter than when it operated on Upper Delaware Road.

The planning commission meeting is scheduled to begin at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the top-floor meeting room of the Henderson Municipal Center. Other properties on the agenda include:

6364 Cairo-Dixie Road: Chris Jones is asking permission to carve a one-acre lot out of a 17-acre tract and use a 700-foot-long strip to provide required road frontage. Subdivision regulations require a minimum of 100 feet of road frontage; Jones is asking for permission to have the access strip be only 50 feet wide.

5741 Airline Road: Becks Superior Hybrid Seed is asking for site approval for a seed research, testing and distribution facility. Nearly nine acres will be devoted to buildings, parking and a distribution center, with the remainder to be test plots. About 10 to 15 truckloads are expected to be shipped daily, and about six employees are anticipated initially.

709 First St.: Kurtis Wilson is asking for site plan approval for a five-unit apartment complex, which would be composed of three two-bedroom units and two three-bedroom units.

500 14th St.: Developer Robert Cornbleet, through III C of Kentucky LLC, is asking for revised site plan approval for an apartment complex of three proposed buildings, each with five one-bedroom apartments. He had originally proposed four buildings on the property. Most of the apartments have already been built.

492 Newman Stillhouse Road: Billy R. Daugherty and David Wathen are asking for permission to redraw property lines near the intersection with Bluff City-Newman Road. The planning commission's approval is needed because the land is in a flood hazard area.

Henderson reaches regional final with 70-60 win over Trigg

HOPKINSVILLE – Despite a nerve-wracking finish to the first half that saw Trigg County fashion a 17-2 run and take a 40-32 halftime lead, Henderson County ended up right where it expected to be all along.

The Colonels (26-5) will face Hopkinsville (30-4) tonight at 7 p.m. in the championship game of the Second Region Tournament after a 70-60 come-from-behind win over Trigg County in Friday's semifinal round to put the region's top two teams head-to-head for a trip to Rupp Arena.

"We knew we were going to be here. We didn't talk about it, but we knew," said Henderson County junior Kaleb Duckworth, whose 22 points and 13 rebounds helped spark the Colonels' second-half comeback.

Henderson County was nearly rattled by the Wildcats' furious finish to the first half that was helped along by 12 fouls, including three charges, that were whistled on the Colonels in the final 4:10 of the half.

After trailing 30-23, Trigg County (20-9) took a 40-32 lead into the halftime break, which couldn't have come soon enough for Henderson County.

"I do think with about two minutes left I thought I started to see some question marks. I started to see some uncharacteristic behavior like getting after referees," Henderson County coach Tyler Smithhart said. "I don't think that a timeout was going to fix that. (Trigg) absolutely played with fury right there at the end of the half. Halftime probably couldn't have come at a better time."

A different team emerged from the Henderson County locker room in the second half.

"I could tell by the looks on their faces that they had owned the game for the first 12 minutes and they expected to own it the last 16," Smithhart said.

"We knew we'd step it up in the second half," said Duckworth, who had 13 of his points and seven rebounds in the second half.

Defensive adjustments made in the second half focused on eliminating the playmaking of Deonquez Nance, who was named the Second Region Coaches Association's player of the year before the game.

"We let him create for some other guys (in the first half). That's where he was so dangerous tonight," Smithhart said. "Every time I looked up he was making nice plays for his teammates. Our focus was to keep him from making plays for others and he did a good job of that. That's why he's player of the year."

Nance was 7-of-19 from the field and 6-of-11 from the free-throw line for 21 points and had three assists.

The difference in the second half was rebounding and defense, Smithhart said. "We got away from that in the first half. We got cute. I think we played with a little bit of a lack of respect. That's that the No. 1 player in the region and we looked at his back the entire first half. He cut us up," he said. "The adjustments coach Blake (Stone) made defensively at the half were to keep them in front and to challenge shots. We absolutely dug in and played with a lot of heart and guts."

Trigg County scored just three points in the third quarter, all on free throws. Henderson County, which started the second half with an 11-0 run, took the lead for good at 41-40 on Brady Norman's 3-pointer from the corner with 3:04 to go in the third.

Norman drew his first varsity start in place of David Simmons, who hadn't practiced the last two days as he recovers from an upper respiratory infection. Norman finished with 13 points and seven rebounds.

The Colonels led 48-43 at the start of the fourth quarter, but Nance drove the lane to cut the lead back to three. Simmons, who scored 11 of his 16 points in the fourth quarter, helped spark a 7-0 run that pushed the lead back to 10. Norman also had a layup after blocking a shot in that run. The Wildcats were never closer than eight the rest of the way.

Hopkinsville held off an upset bid by Madisonville with a 63-62 win on a free throw by Jordan Majors with 0:02.8 to play. Majors led the defending region champions with 18 points and Jaqualis Matlock added 17.

Freshman Jaiveon Eaves topped Madisonville with 23 points, while Daylyn Jones added 20.

"They are the No. 4 team in the state for a reason. Our guys have to stay loose and relaxed, play their game and have fun," said Smithhart, whose team can move into the underdog role tonight. "I don't think anybody besides Henderson County faithful expects us to win that basketball game."

Teams set for final Big East duel

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE – Louisville isn't approaching Saturday's game at No. 12 Syracuse feeling nostalgic or sentimental about its final Big East matchup against the Orange.

Revenge isn't even the primary motivation for the No. 10 Cardinals, whose agenda is winning out and making a run at the conference tournament title. They've won four in a row and their hopes are riding on the improved play of guard Russ Smith, who is making smarter decisions and has cut down his turnovers.

The Cardinals (23-5, 11-4 Big East) were No. 1 on Jan. 19 when Syracuse (22-6, 10-5) dealt the Cardinals their only home loss this season. That started a three-game slide, shuffling Louisville to the middle of the pack.

Syracuse is now swooning with two straight losses and is 5-5 since beating the Cardinals.

Louisville's leading scorer had just one assist in the loss to the Orange but is now working to find open teammates.

"I can pass. I know I can," the 6-foot-1 Smith said Friday. "I just have to make the right decision — whether it is shoot or look for the open guy when I'm driving."

His mindset is a change from the slashing, shoot-first style he honed on Brooklyn playgrounds and displayed earlier this season. Teammates got into rebounding position as soon as he got the ball.

Louisville vs. Syracuse
Site: Syracuse, N.Y.
Tipoff: 11 a.m. CST
Television: CBS

After Louisville's loss to Syracuse he had more turnovers (49) than assists (48). In the 10 games since, Smith has 34 assists to 22 turnovers, adding nearly an extra assist while shaving more than half a turnover a game.

Scoring hasn't been an issue for the junior. His 17 points against DePaul on Wednesday made him Louisville's 65th 1,000-point scorer, more than half coming this season.

His 18.4-point average, if it holds, would be the highest since Reece Gaines (21.0) in 2001-02, coach Rick Pitino's first season.

Louisville assistant Kevin Keatts said Smith has changed since the Syracuse game.

"He's become a better basketball player and he's honestly putting the effort in to be a better teammate as far as passing the ball and getting everyone involved," Keatts said.

"He's the one guy on the team that can make everyone else better because he draws so much attention."

Keatts said Pitino's message to Smith underscores his importance to the Cardinals' postseason hopes.

"Coach is constantly on him about if we're going to go a long ways — if we're going to have to a chance to win the Big East, if we're going to chance to win the Big East tournament — 'Russ, you've got to be a passer. Score when you need to but you've got to find people,' " he added.

Finding the balance between scoring and setting up his teammates is still coming to the player Pitino nicknamed "Russdiculous" because of his unpredictability.

"It's always going to be hard at first because you're diverting away from something you've always done," Smith said. "But if it comes down to, 'in order for us to win,' then I'm going to try everything in my power."

Arkansas' Young looks to rebound vs. Kentucky

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – Mike Anderson won't say whether he thinks Arkansas has a chance of making the NCAA tournament.

The Razorbacks coach won't address the possibility of an NIT bid, either, preferring to stay in the here and now.

What Anderson will talk about these days — following back-to-back losses that have Arkansas' postseason hopes fading — are the struggles of his leading scorer, BJ Young.

Young, who considered entering the NBA draft last year after his freshman season, has struggled to find his shot this season for the Razorbacks (17-11, 8-7 Southeastern Conference).

What was just a slight drop off, however, has turned into a full-out slump for the talented sophomore over the last two games — a forgettable stretch during which Young is 2 of 19 from the field. That includes an 0-for-8 performance in a loss at Florida and several key late turnovers in Wednesday night's loss at LSU.

"A lot of times, BJ puts a lot more pressure on himself than he needs to," Anderson said. "That's part of it. And, as a coach, you try to take away those pressures and just let him go out and be a kid.

"... So, hopefully, he gets back to being BJ, the happy go-lucky kid."

Young is still averaging 15.3 points per game, but his struggles couldn't have come at a worse time for the Razorbacks, who were considered in the mix for an NCAA tournament bid before their latest setbacks. The school hasn't reached the tournament since 2008, though it hopes to make a renewed case when it hosts Kentucky (20-8, 11-4) on Saturday.

It's a game in which Anderson knows he'll need Young's best if Arkansas expects to build on a 16-1 home record this season — and give those postseason hopes some new life.

"I keep saying we're in the hunt for something," Anderson said. "I don't know what it is, but that's something."

The road to the postseason is far from an easy one for the Razorbacks, beginning against the surging Wildcats. Kentucky has won three games in a row since losing shot-blocking freshman Nerlens Noel for the season with a knee injury, including Wednesday night's 85-55 win over Mississippi State.

Five players scored in double figures for the defending national champion in the win, a theme coach John Calipari has stressed since an 88-58 loss to Tennessee in the first game following Noel's injury.

"The last few games and how we've been playing, I think we kind of made a breakthrough and everybody's starting to click with each other," Kentucky guard Ryan Harrow said.

While Kentucky appears well on its way to finding itself and securing an NCAA tournament bid, Arkansas is anything but secure with its postseason destination. The Razorbacks could go a long way to helping themselves with a win over the Wildcats.

Flacco agrees to Ravens deal

Joe Flacco is staying in Baltimore.

The Super Bowl MVP quarterback agreed Friday to a new contact with the Ravens, two people with knowledge of the deal told The Associated Press.

Terms were not immediately available, but Flacco was expected to get a long-term contract close to the $20 million average salary Drew Brees earns with New Orleans.

Flacco played out his rookie contract last season for $6.76 million and led Baltimore to the NFL championship.

The 28-year-old Flacco is the only quarterback to win a postseason game in each of his first five pro seasons.

St. Mary's placed on NCAA probation

MORAGA, Calif. – The NCAA has placed Saint Mary's on four years' probation for "failure to monitor its men's basketball program," reducing scholarships after it says the perennial mid-major power committed several recruiting violations.

The NCAA Committee on Infractions also said Friday that Gaels coach Randy Bennett "acted unethically in his recruitment of international prospects" and "failed to promote an atmosphere for compliance." Bennett will not be allowed to recruit off campus and will serve a five-game suspension next season.

Saint Mary's will still be allowed to participate in the West Coast Conference tournament and the NCAA tournament.

Kelly shines as Cards tie Astros

KISSIMMEE, Fla. – Joe Kelly opened his bid for a spot in the St. Louis Cardinals' starting rotation with two hitless innings, and Adron Chambers hit a three-run homer in Friday's 8-8 tie against the Houston Astros.

Among three candidates to replace the injured Chris Carpenter in the Cards' rotation, Kelly walked one hitter in each inning.

Daniel Descalso and Pete Kozma had two hits and drove in two runs each for the Cardinals, who have won five straight.

Chris Carter homered for the Astros, a fifth-inning drive off Jason Motte.

Berdych reaches final at Dubai

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates – Tomas Berdych saved three match points before upsetting defending champion Roger Federer 3-6, 7-6 (8), 6-4 Friday to earn a spot in the final of the Dubai Championships against Novak Djokovic.

Top-ranked Djokovic rallied past fourth-seeded Juan Martin del Potro 6-3, 7-6 (4) in the other semifinal.

Berdych broke to go up 3-2 in the third set, only for Federer to save two match points before holding for 5-4. But the sixth-ranked Berdych finished it off when Federer hit a crosscourt forehand into the net.

Court storming a daily ritual

■ With so many upsets, postgame mayhem on the rise in college hoops

By Aaron Beard

STEVE HELBER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fans celebrate Virginia's victory over Duke by storming the court in Charlottesville, Va., on Thursday night. The Cavaliers defeated the third-ranked Blue Devils 73-68.

With so many upsets in college basketball, there seems to be daily highlights of fans storming the court to celebrate.

No team has separated itself from the pack and there have been 15 instances when top-five teams in the Associated Press Top 25 poll lost to unranked squads on the road, according to STATS LLC.

That's led to a lot of postgame mayhem — and Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said it's not all fun and games when it happens.

He would know. His third-ranked Blue Devils have lost on the road to start court-storming celebrations four times this year, including Thursday when his team had to battle through the surge at Virginia. The coach said afterward that fans should celebrate, but the focus should be getting the visiting team off the court first.

"Put yourself in a position with one of our players or coaches," Krzyzewski said. "I'm not saying anybody did this but the potential is there all the time for a fan to come up to you and say, 'Coach, you're a ... .' Or push you or hit you. What do you do? What if you did something? That would be the story, right? So we deserve that type of protection."

There had been only seven instances in each of the past two seasons in which AP top-five teams lost to unranked teams on the road. But the past week has shown just how wild this season has been by comparison.

First No. 5 Miami — ranked No. 2 at the time — lost at Wake Forest last weekend. Then top-ranked Indiana lost at Minnesota on Tuesday. The next night, No. 4 Michigan fell to a Penn State team that was 0-14 in Big Ten play.

And in each of those cases, fans gathered around the edges of the court to count off the final seconds before charging in to celebrate at the sound of the horn.

While BCS conferences typically leave it to host schools to manage postgame celebrations, the Southeastern Conference fines its members when fans storm the court. The fines range from $5,000 for the first offense, $25,000 for the second and $50,000 for a third.

Karl Hicks, the ACC's senior associate commissioner for men's basketball, said his league doesn't allow unauthorized personnel on the court before, during or after the game as a general rule. But the ACC doesn't have a policy in place to fine or sanction a school if its fans rush the court.

In those moments, the first challenge for the host school is getting the officials and visiting team off the court safely and as quickly as possible.

"We do share best practices between and amongst schools, and advise where appropriate," Hicks wrote in an email Friday.

Hicks also said he hadn't received any complaints from Duke on Friday regarding the Virginia postgame rush, which created a bottleneck and stalled the Blue Devils as they tried to get to the tunnel and into the locker room as Cavaliers fans ran in.

Jon Jackson, an associate athletic director for media relations and public affairs at Duke, wrote in an email that the university's position is that "the safety of the players and coaches should be paramount at any venue."

He declined to comment when asked whether Duke would file a complaint to the league about anything that happened at Virginia or bring up court storming for discussion at offseason ACC meetings.

As the horn sounded, Virginia security staff wearing yellow jackets formed a line where the teams were shaking hands, while other security staff escorted the Blue Devils to the tunnel on the way to the locker room where the brief delay occurred.

Virginia athletic director Craig Littlepage said Friday it took about a minute from those handshakes until Duke arrived in its locker room. Littlepage said he felt arena staff "did a very good job" of managing the situation Thursday night, down to an announcement discouraging fans from rushing the court.

"I know having been in that situation as a player and as a coach, you feel an urgency to want to get to the locker room," Littlepage said. "I understand that, but the key is to make sure that you get to the locker room safely so there are decisions made to ensure the safety and to make sure that there are no interactions that could lead to somebody being hassled verbally, physically hassled, that sort of thing."

At Penn State on Wednesday night, an arena official had ushers go down to the floor to be ready and make sure Michigan coaches and players were able to leave without incident. The school said the potential of fans rushing the court is monitored and discussed, especially before games of note, and that the safety of visiting coaches and players is a priority.

North Carolina State coach Mark Gottfried has been on both sides this year.

His team had to make its way off the court after losses at Maryland and Wake Forest. N.C. State also savored a home win against then-No. 1 Duke in January with its own court storming fans — though that celebration led to a fan in a wheelchair being knocked to the floor and Wolfpack junior C.J. Leslie having to get him back in his wheelchair amid the chaos.

Gottfried said Friday he hopes the ACC "never, ever bans storming the court" as was done in the SEC, where Gottfried coached at Alabama.

"Yeah, I think it can be times (where) you might run into a tricky situation," Gottfried said. "I think that's possible. But I think it adds to the college game — the atmosphere, being a student.

"So I'm hopeful that our league never adopts what the SEC did."

Patrick boosted by top drivers' comments

■ Her spirits are lifted by kind words from Stewart, Johnson

By John Marshall
Associated Press

AVONDALE, Ariz. – Danica Patrick was bummed after fading on the last lap of a historic Daytona 500.

Some kind words from owner Tony Stewart and race winner Jimmie Johnson picked up her spirits a little.

"To have somebody like Tony Stewart and Jimmie Johnson tell me that on some level I made good decisions out there at the very end was a really nice thing for them to say," Patrick said from Phoenix International Raceway on Friday.

"It makes me feel a little better. I still feel like I want to have a better plan in the future, but in that moment (they said) I had made some decisions, so it was appreciated."

In her first full season in a Sprint Cup car, Patrick became the first woman to be on the pole at the Daytona 500 and raced near the front all day, leading five laps. Coming around on the final lap, she had Johnson and Greg Biffle in front, leaving her in position to make a run for the win.

Instead, Patrick got bogged down on the outside behind Biffle and was passed by drivers on the low side, fading from third to eighth.

In her post-race meeting with Stewart, co-owner of Stewart-Haas Racing, Patrick was told she made the right move and probably would have lost even more ground if she had tried something.

"I thought she did a great job last week," Stewart said at PIR. "She played a very, very smart race because it's very easy to get over-anxious and want to do better than where you're at, and cause yourself to have a worse day.

Danica Patrick

She displayed a lot of patience and that's really hard to do. So I thought she did a great job."

Patrick also received some more encouragement from Johnson after congratulating the five-time series champion on his second Daytona 500 win.

"He said I did a nice job, too," Patrick said. "I said I wish I had a better plan, but thank you and I have a lot to learn. He said that the two wins he had, he didn't have a plan and sometimes you just have to take it on the fly and work with what happens in the moment."

■ Dale Earnhardt Jr. shook off a hard hit in last week's Nationwide Series race to start the Daytona 500 the next day.

For someone who's coming off a concussion, it was a big step.

"I was real happy I was able to pass a personal test, I guess," Earnhardt said from Phoenix International Raceway on Friday. "When you have concussions, sometimes they're easier to get the second, third, fourth time around, so we survived that one. We'll try to move on and not get in anymore wrecks."

Earnhardt made the Chase for the championship last season, but finished 12th after missing the final two races due to post-concussion symptoms.

He had his health tested right away this season after hitting the wall hard during a last-lap crash in the Daytona Nationwide race last Saturday.

The 12-car melee started as the cars headed toward the checkered flag and leader Regan Smith attempted to block Brad Keselowski, setting off a chain reaction. Rookie Kyle Larson's car went airborne during the wreck and flew into the fence, injuring more than two dozen fans.

Earnhardt tried to steer clear of the carnage in front of him, but was blocked and got sent into the wall hard. He was cleared in the medical center after the wreck and returned the next day for the Daytona 500, where he finished second for the third time in four years after a late charge.

■ Mark Martin will be on the pole at Phoenix International Raceway for the second straight year after becoming the second-oldest pole-sitter in NASCAR history.

Martin went around PIR's mile oval at a speed of 138.075 mph on Friday to earn his 56th career pole a week after finishing third in the Daytona 500.

Martin turned 54 in January, leaving him a few months short beating Harry Gant as the oldest driver to win a Sprint Cup pole. Gant was 54 when he won his last pole at Bristol in 1994.

Kasey Kahne will start on the front row with Martin for Sunday's 312-mile race. Daytona 500 winner Jimmie Johnson will take the green flag in third next to Kyle Busch.

Rory walks off the course at Honda Classic

Wire reports

Rory McIlroy left before his round was even over. Tiger Woods had to rally just to stick around.

And with all that drama Friday in the Honda Classic, hardly anyone noticed that Luke Guthrie showed off his potential in a big way with a 7-under 63 to take a one-shot lead going into the weekend at PGA National.

Guthrie, pegged by many of his peers as a rookie worth watching going into the year, played bogey-free on another cool, cloudy day.

After finishing his round, he walked into an interview room when someone mentioned that McIlroy walked off the course after being 7-over par through eight holes.

Guthrie was at 9-under 131 and had a one-shot lead over Michael Thompson.

McIlroy, who missed the cut in Abu Dhabi and lost in the first round of the Match Play Championship in his previous two starts, made a double bogey on his second hole and rinsed two balls in the water on the 16th hole on his way to a triple bogey.

He hit his approach to the 18th in the water and never finished the hole.

He shook hands with Ernie Els and Mark Wilson and was on his way.

McIlroy told three reporters who followed him to his car that it was nothing physical but that he was "not in a good place mentally."

An hour later, he released a statement through his management company that he couldn't concentrate because of a sore wisdom tooth.

Woods looked as if he might join him. After mixing birdies with bogeys, Woods went bunker-to-bunker, over the green, short of the green and wound up with a double bogey on the 13th hole that put him one shot under the cut line with five holes to play.

Instead of the second straight week when No. 1 and No. 2 were gone early, Woods answered with a shot into 5 feet for birdie, a 6-foot par putt on the 16th hole, a par save from the back bunker on the 17th that was easier than it looked, and a par save from near the grandstand by the 18th green that was harder than it looked.

He wound up with another 70 to make the cut on the number, nine shots out of the lead.

■ LPGA Tour: Stacy Lewis made six birdies to shoot a 6-under 66 and take a two-stroke lead after Friday's second round of the HSBC Women's Champions.

■ European Tour: Charl Coetzee of South Africa shot a 7-under 65 to hold the clubhouse lead by a stroke Friday when a thunderstorm halted the second round of the Tshwane Open.

Abraham and Turner latest NFL stars free

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The free agency frenzy doesn't begin until March 12.

Tell that to general managers who have begun flooding the market with veterans they have cut — guys who can sign with any team at any time.

Joining that group Friday were such former Pro Bowl players John Abraham and Michael Turner, released by Atlanta along with cornerback Dunta Robinson.

Also available is 2009 Defensive Player of the Year Charles Woodson; the Green Bay Packers let the defensive back go last month.

While players whose contracts have expired can't change addresses for another 11 days, the so-called "street free agents" now out there can joins teams immediately. That's already happened with former Buffalo safety George Wilson, who signed with the Titans, and it certainly could occur again before the likes of Mike Wallace, Jake Long, Reggie Bush and Greg Jennings on offense or Dwight Freeney, Anthony Spencer, Paul Kruger and Cliff Avril on defense become available.

Wilson was coveted by Tennessee for reasons that stretch beyond the field, and Woodson also could fall into that category. Listen to what Titans general manager Ruston Webster says about Wilson, who twice was Buffalo's Walter Payton Man of the Year nominee:

"George is a quality veteran player. He will contribute for us on the field, but his contributions also will come off the field, in the locker room and in the meetings rooms. He was respected as a football player and a leader during his career in Buffalo, and he will bring that veteran presence to our team."

The 36-year-old Woodson would be a nice fit in a young secondary needing a boost of savvy and physicality, most likely as a safety. Such landing spots as New England, Cleveland and Indianapolis could work.

Abraham has a history of nagging injuries and he'll most likely be a situational pass rusher at age 35 next season. Still, any club looking for such a boost could do worse than Abraham, who had 10 sacks as a part-timer when the Falcons went 13-3 last year.

Turner no longer seems capable of being an every-down back, but his power and quick feet could help a team that has an established starter but no proven backup. Or an offense with a speedy running back and not much inside presence.

Oft-injured Ahmad Bradshaw, late of the Giants, also fits that category. No one competes harder, but that has been a detriment for Bradshaw, too, because his style makes him vulnerable to getting hurt.

Ah, price.

A major reason these players are unemployed right now is salary. Atlanta saved about $16 million in cap space with its three cuts Friday. The New York Jets freed up $31 million when they released linebackers Calvin Pace and Bart Scott, safety Eric Smith and tackle Jason Smith last month.

Naturally, there are other factors, including age, health, depth at a position, a change in coaching staffs and, of course, production.

Players such as Packers center Jeff Saturday and Carolina DT Ron Edwards simply might be at the end of the line.

NBA sons making mark in college

■ Some very familiar names are lighting up the courts this season

By Aaron Beard
Associated Press

There are some familiar NBA names lighting up college basketball courts this season.

Curry, Hardaway, Hawkins, Howard, Mason and Robinson.

Below the sons of six former NBA players who are having strong seasons this year. And there are often shades of their fathers' games in their play, whether it's their knack for scoring in bunches, knocking down 3-pointers, playing with a tough-nosed style or wearing the same jersey number.

Seth Curry, Duke: This family is known for the ability to shoot the 3, starting with Dell Curry during 16 NBA seasons starting during the late 1980s. Next came son Stephen's rise from Davidson to the Golden State Warriors. Now there's Stephen's younger brother Seth, a 6-foot-2 senior for the Blue Devils. He has been the top outside threat to complement Mason Plumlee inside. Curry has rarely practiced this year due to persistent pain in his right shin, but he's averaging about 17 points and shooting nearly 44 percent from 3-point range entering the week. Maryland coach Mark Turgeon put it simply after Curry scored 25 against his Terrapins earlier this month: "Seth Curry is a winner and he makes big shots."

Tim Hardaway Jr., Michigan: The 6-6 junior guard and son of the former NBA all-star has been part of the Wolverines' 1-2 punch playing alongside sophomore guard Trey Burke. Hardaway is second on the team in scoring (15 points) and shooting about 40 percent from 3-point range. He's also been one of Michigan's top defenders and scored his 1,000th career point this season. He's reached double figures in 20 of 26 games this year, highlighted by a 23-point performance with six 3-pointers against Ohio State.

Corey Hawkins, UC Davis: The son of former NBA guard Hersey Hawkins entered the week averaging 20.5 points and 5.7 rebounds. Hawkins was also shooting about 47 percent from the field and 40 percent from behind the arc. The 6-3 sophomore is an Arizona State transfer and had a school-record 40 points at Hawaii in January to follow in his high-scoring father's footsteps at Bradley, where Hersey Hawkins is the school's all-time leading scorer and ranks seventh in Division I history with 3,008 career points. In Hersey's senior year, he averaged 36.3 points and scored 63 in a game. "One thing he always told me is be able to get into the lane and finish around the bigs," Corey Hawkins said. "... Not being that tall, you have to find ways to finish in the paint. He helped me a lot with that."

Juwan Howard Jr., Detroit: The 6-6 sophomore is the son of the former Michigan "Fab Five" member who played in the NBA nearly two decades. Juwan Jr. transferred from Western Michigan and sat out the Titans' NCAA tournament appearance last year, but he's started nearly every game and averaged about 9 points and 3.6 rebounds this season heading into Tuesday's game against Loyola of Chicago. He's also shooting 39 percent from 3-point range and 82 percent from the foul line in a supporting role behind high-scoring guard Ray McCallum Jr. as Detroit tries to return to the NCAAs.

Antoine Mason, Niagara: The son of former NBA all-star Anthony Mason has been the top threat for the Purple Eagles, averaging a team-high 18.9 points while playing 36 minutes per game entering the week. The 6-3 redshirt sophomore recently returned from a four-game absence due to an ankle injury, but has scored in double figures in 31 straight games. Mason wears the same number (14) and carries the same nickname ("Mase") as his father. Coach Joe Mihalich said Mason has a "fearlessness" and is "an incredible competitor." Sound familiar? "I was sensitive to the pressures that a kid would feel when your dad's an NBA player," Mihalich said. "I said to his dad, 'Listen, I'm trying hard not to compare him to you. I don't want him to feel that pressure.' His dad was cool. He was like, 'Nah, go ahead, you can do that.' And it was a good thing to do because it does help young Mase respond. It motivates him."

Glenn Robinson III, Michigan: Hardaway isn't the only Wolverine on the list. This 6-6 freshman forward is the son of the Purdue All-American and former NBA all-star known as "Big Dog." Robinson is fourth on the team, averaging about 11 points on 57 percent shooting to go along with 5.5 rebounds as an every-game starter. Robinson matched his season-high with 21 points on 6-for-6 shooting while pulling down 10 rebounds in a win against Penn State on Feb. 17. He had managed just six points in the previous two games, but said his confidence never wavered. "A lot of people know I like to cut to the basket," Robinson said. "They kind of sag off me and those open shots weren't there, but I've got to keep adjusting to that and keep working on it at practice."

Little hope for Astros, Marlins this spring

■ Both teams are in midst of huge rebuilding

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Spring training is supposed to be a time of hope.

Unless you're the Houston Astros. Or the Miami Marlins.

With no-name rosters and in the midst of massive rebuilding jobs, Houston and Miami are more likely to be remembered as among the worst teams in recent history than for making an improbable run at the playoffs.

The Astros lost 107 games last year, after 106 defeats in 2011. Houston's main goal will be trying to avoid becoming the first team since the expansion New York Mets in the 1960s to lose at least 106 games in three straight seasons.

"No one expects us to do well," Lucas Harrell said Thursday, after pitching in a spring training game against the New York Yankees. "So, when we do well, it's going to be kind of like, 'Oh, wow.' I definitely think we have a chance to shock a lot of people this year."

Brave words, especially when the Astros face the additional burden of moving from the NL into what looks like the toughest division in baseball, the AL West. They'll be matched regularly against two 2012 playoff teams — Oakland and Texas — plus the high-priced Los Angeles Angels, who have three of the game's most dynamic players: Albert Pujols, Josh Hamilton and Mike Trout.

Down in Miami, owner Jeffrey Loria totally dismantled the Marlins after a disappointing debut season in a new stadium paid for largely with public tax dollars. He's now a pariah in south Florida and a laughingstock through the rest of the baseball, settling for a roster that might do pretty well in Triple-A — but not in the big leagues.

"I'm still trying to learn their names," said Davey Johnson, manager of the NL East champion Washington Nationals. "I'm not even sure what position the names are going in."

He's not the only one.

After trading away nearly all their high-priced players in one stunning offseason, the Marlins are prepared to send out a lineup that includes five players with less two full seasons in the big leagues, plus a rotation that has only one starter with as many as 10 wins in a season.

"I feel like we have a plan," first-year manager Mike Redmond said. "Will it take a few years? Maybe. But we feel like we have a plan that's going to work with a lot of young players and a lot of young talent. I'm looking forward to the challenge and the opportunity."

Redmond keeps reminding his players he was one of 19 rookies on the 1998 Marlins, the remnants of a World Series title team that was torn apart by a previous owner. Five years later, many of those young players were the centerpiece of another championship squad.

Of course, Redmond probably doesn't tell his team how the Marlins finished in '98 — 54-108.

"It's a fresh start," he said. "At the end of the day, man, nobody gives us a chance to do anything. We have the ability to go out and surprise some teams. I think we're a better team than people give us credit for. But at the end of the day, we're got to go out there and prove that."

According to STATS, only 21 teams have finished with a winning percentage of .300 or less since 1900 — just two of those (the 1962 New York Mets, in their first season, and the 2003 Detroit Tigers) in the 162-game era. To avoid joining that infamous list, Miami and Houston will have to win 49 games this season, which might be a challenge.

Certainly, both teams can expect to play before lots of empty seats.

Last season, the Marlins drew 2.2 million to their retractable roof stadium, which was the third-highest total in franchise history but ranked only 12th in the NL and was far below expectations. Not surprisingly after the offseason purge, season-ticket sales have slumped badly and Miami won't come anywhere close to drawing that many fans in 2013.

Houston's attendance plummeted to a NL-worst 1.6 million last season, its lowest total in 17 years, and the lack of major moves during the offseason is likely to send it dipping even more.

Time for sister to face alcoholic, abusive husband

COLUMNIST

Dear Amy: My sister's husband is an alcoholic. He makes half-hearted attempts to get treatment, and then goes on another binge.

When he's drinking and gets verbally abusive, my sister shows up at my place to crash for a few days, until he's sober again.

This has been going on for years. I love my sister, and I will always be there for her — but I am getting fed up.

Whenever she shows up at my door, she says she will leave him.

Then she goes back and tells me he has apologized, he's getting treatment — and then the whole cycle replays itself again and again.

I know she is "enabling" him by not giving him an ultimatum and not moving out (her finances are tight, but since she is paying their rent now, I know she could afford a place of her own).

Am I enabling her by letting her crash on my couch time after time? Do any of your readers who have been through this have any advice?

— Fed Up

Dear Fed Up: You are "enabling" your sister. Your availability as a crash pad provides an escape hatch — not only from her domestic emergencies, but also from her anxiety.

It also helps her delay making a tougher decision. You, basically, are part of this marriage's system.

If you want out, tell her so. Ask her, "What would you do if I wasn't here? What would you do if you didn't have any other place to go until your husband sobered up?"

Tell her you don't want to be involved in her marriage anymore and that it's time for her to find another place to live so she can move out for good.

Take her apartment hunting. I don't think you should turn her away, but you should make it more uncomfortable for her to fall onto your couch.

I'm sure readers will share their ideas.

Dear Amy: I'm a girl in high school, and I have a bit of a problem. Last year I was bored and went on a website and ended up meeting this guy (who is my age).

We've been texting, calling and Skyping ever since. I really like this guy, but I've never actually met him in person, and he lives in a different state.

First of all, is it worth having feelings for someone you might not meet for years and who you don't get to actually hang out with?

I've come to look forward to talking to him every day, and don't know what I'd do if it stopped. I hope he or my parents don't see this.

— Wondering

Dear Wondering: You almost had me — until your last sentence.

There's nothing wrong with having a long-distance relationship, and it's increasingly common for people who have never met in person to engage through phone, Facebook, text and Skype.

This particular relationship raises all sorts of red flags (for instance, you likely aren't able to verify a single thing about each other).

It is also impeding your motivation to do the hard work to meet and interact with people in person.

But the most important thing about it is the secrecy. It is wrong to have a secret relationship. It just is.

Long shoehorn serves as safety latch on kitchen drawers

COLUMNIST

Dear Heloise: My husband stumbled on a great way to keep our 13-month-old grandson from getting into the kitchen drawers without having to install drawer safety latches.

He purchased 24-inch extra-long shoehorns. They were inexpensive and plastic.

He slid the shoehorn with the hook so that it grabs the drawer handle on the first drawer and slides down through the rest of them.

Depending on the number of drawers in a set we want to secure, he cuts the shoehorn to the desired length.

I usually make sure the bottom drawers are safe ones so my grandson can get into them — his favorite place to play.

Small downside: His little hands can sneak in on the sides, but he can't really get into the drawer.

— Lynda H., Boerne, Texas

Dear Lynda: This is an inexpensive solution, but it's wise to invest in the right safety locks. You don't want to take a chance that a little one could get into trouble.

— Heloise

Dear Readers: J.P. McGiffin of Bedford, N.H., sent a photo of her cat, Armani.

She says this handsome boy knows how to keep warm or cool because he always wears his gray suit.

To see Armani in his suit, visit www.Heloise.com and click on "Pets."

— Heloise

Dear Heloise: I am a bird breeder, hand-feeder and retailer of birds at a shop.

It is important to do research before buying any pet. I suggest that readers buy from someone who educates as well as sells.

There are many products that eliminate the mess birds make. There are products that can be bought that keep the food inside the cage instead of falling everywhere.

Sudden increase in insulin needs sign of an infection

DR. KEITH ROACH
COLUMNIST

Dear Dr. Roach: I'm a diabetic, and three weeks ago I had my appendix removed. The surgeon said it was very large and had attached itself to my liver.

I know the liver plays a big part in blood sugar control. Since then, my blood sugar has fallen by 50 percent. My insulin dose has gone from 100 units per day to 15-20.

The surgeon thought I could have had a low-grade infection for some time, causing problems. What do you think?

— G.R.

Dear G.R.: I think your surgeon is exactly right. A chronic infection can cause a big increase in your insulin needs, and the only way to restore it is to cure the infection.

The only way to cure a chronic, smoldering appendicitis, or abscess around the appendix, is to get rid of it.

A sudden increase in insulin needs can mean a hidden infection.

Dear Dr. Roach: I am 82 years old and have never had chickenpox. My physician wants me to get the chickenpox vaccine and then the shingles shot.

I took my prescription to the health department, which is where I was supposed to get the chickenpox vaccine, but the nurses were reluctant to give it. Someone from disease control was supposed to call me, but so far I haven't heard from them.

My question is, if I haven't had chickenpox, why do I need the vaccine just to take the shingles shot?

— O.M.

Dear O.M.: Everybody over 60 should have the vaccine for shingles, whether or not they have had chickenpox or shingles. In fact, the vaccine for shingles uses the same strain as the vaccine for chicken pox — but the shingles vaccine is at least 14 times more potent.

The American Council on Immunization Practices recommends just the shingles vaccine for people who have never had chickenpox. Just get the shingles vaccine.

Dr. Roach regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but will incorporate them in the column whenever possible. Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 2). You can do anything, but you have to decide. Formulate several possible long-term plans; think of it as an exercise in alternative realities. Then in April, commit with your whole being to one of them. Magic touches you now, in June and in October. Mergers happen in May. Financial help comes in June. Get to the bottom of a mystery in July. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 23, 49, 38 and 16.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). If you're not sure whether you can make a situation better, at least make it more memorable. It's not always clear how to steer a scene in a positive direction, but you have a good idea of how to turn up the general intensity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). The ebb and flow of energy is inconstant. You may go from being tired to having more energy than you know what to do with. And tonight you'll be awakened by your own interesting thoughts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You've been playing it rather low-key. No one is waiting for you to come up with answers, which increases the likelihood that you'll surprise and delight with your off-the-wall, out-of-the-blue solutions.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Feeling good about your place will depend on your ability to relate to those around you. If you can't relate, you can't relax. So the energy you put into listening to and creating rapport with your "people" will be well spent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Your time is priceless. If you could put a price tag on it, there are many who wouldn't be able to afford it. So you're not about to just give it away to unworthy endeavors. You'll be exceptionally choosy, which is wise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). If you succeed at something that doesn't matter to you, whose success is it? You need time to yourself so you can sort out what really counts in your mind, heart and world.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You trust the strong, silent type. Quiet people around you know more than they let on. The smart ones won't broadcast the fallacies of others or spout off all the information they know.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll be moved by what you witness. A sad smile or the kind gesture of a lonely person puts you in touch with your own humanity. We need each other; that much is clear.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You know that life is what you make of it, but it's not like you can stay in constant production, either. You need to rest, too, especially after endeavors that required intense focus.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Perhaps there's not a lot you can control in terms of what happens in another person's life, but to the extent that you can have an effect, you will. And today, you'll invest a good amount of time in the welfare of others.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You don't take your associations lightly. But once you decide that you are ideologically aligned with a group of people, you'll be quick to join in their activities, share in their laughter and work toward their goal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You believe in free speech, but that doesn't mean you have to listen to all that's projected in your direction. Besides, some opinions are toxic. Put your filters up, and be ready to run to your own quiet sanctuary for refuge.

God gives us strength to overcome all of life's challenges

BILLY EDWARDS
COLUMNIST

For the last several weeks we have been talking about "Who am I in Christ?" Once we have made Him the Savior and Lord of our lives, we look the same, but there is a transformation in our lives that makes us different.

While it is true that we have been "born again" by the power of the Holy Spirit, we still have that old fleshly nature that we have to contend with every day.

It should be our earnest desire to become more like Christ each day of our lives. In this series of articles, there are three main divisions: I am accepted, I am secure, and I am significant.

Under the first division, we saw that we were accepted because we are children of God. In the second week, we saw that as disciples of Christ, we saw where we are friends of God. Last week we saw that we are accepted because we have been justified.

We were not justified by anything we have done, but by the finished work of Christ on the cross. I can't justify myself and you can't justify yourself. No one can justify us except Him.

Being justified means being found innocent by the law of God. The Bible says we are all breakers of the law.

It is not enough to ask God through His Son Jesus Christ every once and a while and then do the best we can and leave it at that, but we must ask Him to come into our lives.

The Apostle Paul said to the Philippians, "Being found in him, not having my own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith" (Phil. 3:9).

Not having Christ in our lives is like walking around naked with all our filth and sins exposed to God.

We would never think of leaving our home every day without being properly dressed to meet the day, but we do not think of being clothed with our spiritual garments which Christ provides to us.

It's like the old American Express commercial: "Don't leave home without it." In this highly competitive, dog-eat-dog world of ours where so many people are trying just to keep their heads above water, it's so easy to become discouraged about the Christian life. It is as though it doesn't pay to live the Christian life in today's world.

Many Christians just leave their faith at home when they go out to meet the day.

However, at the end of the day when all is said and done, our faith is the one thing that can sustain us. It is the glue that holds us together when life is tearing us apart.

Not only are we justified through Christ and the things that we have already talked about, but we are united to God through the Holy Spirit. He binds us together and fills our hearts with love, joy, peace and a lot of other good things that make the Christian life filled with excitement and expectancy and is so rewarding to live.

Each day we live with Christ is loaded with adventure. As we confront the challenges that life brings our way, we discover anew that His strength and grace is all we need.

The Bible says in I Corinthians 6:17, "But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit."

We are united with God and His Son the Lord Jesus Christ by the Holy Spirit. It is the Holy Spirit that makes us one with the other two members of the eternal Godhead and unites us as the family of God.

The Bible tells us in Romans 8:9, "But you are no longer in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God lives within you. Now he that does not have the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

To the casual reader, it would appear that there are two spirits here, but they are one and the same. They are used interchangeably. The Spirit of God is the Spirit of Christ and vice versa.

Christ told His followers that He and the Father are one (see John 10:30). This is a tough concept for anyone to grasp, much less to these common everyday and uneducated Jews.

But there are just some things we have to accept by faith and leave the whys and hows alone. We believe these wonderful and glorious mysteries of God, Jesus and the Holy Spirit to be true because the Bible and the Lord Jesus Christ have told us it is true.

I am glad that when we die there won't be an entrance exam to get into heaven. There will be no tests given with a No. 2 pencil asking us to explain all of the dark mysteries of life.

If this were the case, I know I would fail. All that will really matter on that day will be what I have done with the Lord and how I have lived my life.

Has there ever been a time in your life when you have come to terms with your sins?

Many people try to cover them up and hope the good will outshine the bad. This may work for the outside world, but only you and the Lord know the real you.

Confess that you are a sinner to the Lord, asking Him to come into your life to give you peace. There can be no lasting tranquility in your life until you know for sure that you are right with him.

Until next week — God bless.

'The Bible' a proverbial action film

By Rob Owen
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

History's "The Bible" would be more accurately titled "The Bible's Greatest Hits (Sanitized for Your Protection)."

But give the 10-hour, five-part program credit for being up front about its intentions. Sunday's premiere (7 p.m. CST) begins with this get-out-of-jail-free disclaimer: "This program is an adaptation of Bible stories that changed our world. It endeavors to stay true to the spirit of the book."

The premiere is indeed true to the spirit of the Good Book, if a bit sparing on details.

The story begins with a Scottish-accented Noah narrating from Genesis as his ark bobs on high seas. His narration includes the briefest of visits with Adam and Eve before "The Bible" moves on to the story of Abraham, which takes up much of the first two hours.

Nothing here is as ridiculous as NBC's 1999 "Noah's Ark" miniseries. But "The Bible" probably should not be taken too seriously or venerated. It often plays more like an action film than a serious interpretation of a holy book.

The premiere presents multi-ethnic angels who take human form to visit Sodom and Gomorrah, where angry villagers rage against Lot for reasons that go unexplained.

Jesus (Diogo Morgado) arrives by episode six (airing March 17) and gets crucified in episode nine (airing March 31, Easter), which also features Roma Downey ("Touched by an Angel") as Mary, Jesus' mother.

Clothing firms fighting over trademarking Jesus' name

By David Benda
Scripps Howard News Service

Jeff Lamont, a country and western musician from Bella Vista, Calif., says he launched a clothing line called "Jesus Up" two years ago to thank the Lord for his recoveries from serious illnesses.

But now Lamont has found himself in an unlikely battle with an Italian jeans maker, which contends he's using the name of the Lord in vain, legally speaking.

Jesus Jeans of Torino, Italy, is contesting Lamont's attempt to trademark the name "Jesus" for his Jesus Up clothing line. Lamont wants to use the sales to help the needy and envisions starting a foundation.

Jesus Jeans, however, said it got the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to register the word "Jesus" as a trademark in 2007.

The American attorney for the firm said Jesus Jeans doesn't object to Lamont using the Jesus Up name to promote Christianity. The issue is using the term as a trademark and putting it on clothing for commercial purposes.

Jesus Jeans' parent company also is battling Jesus Surfed's right to trademark. Jesus Surfed was established last year by Michael Anton of Virginia Beach, Va.

Both Lamont and Anton, who have spoken to each other by phone, say their small businesses are based on scripture and they believe it's ridiculous to suggest consumers will confuse the brands with Jesus Jeans.

"I'm not in it for the money at all," Lamont said. "How dare these people try to make money out of Jesus' name."

Lamont characterizes the trademark case as a battle of good versus evil.

"God's behind this whole thing," said Lamont, who doesn't have an attorney. "God is going to fight this. God is the author and he will be the finisher. He's just using me as a vessel."

Lamont's quest to honor Jesus through his clothing line stems from his youth, when he was stricken with diabetes at 14. The disease left him temporarily blind when he was 30, at which time he says he also had kidney and pancreas transplants.

Lamont says his vision was restored by "surgery and faith."

About three years ago, doctors took out most of Lamont's colon. Recovering from surgery, Lamont, 46, said God spoke to him, telling him to "Jesus up" and give back by feeding God's "sheep."

This Biblical trademark tilt has drawn national headlines.

The Wall Street Journal reported recently that since Jesus Jeans was awarded the trademark in 2007, the company has gone after "more than a dozen other startup clothing lines it claims appropriated "Jesus" without the company's blessing."

It's time we took Jesus' advice on how we should treat the poor

By David Yount
Scripps Howard News Service

Jesus of Nazareth assured his disciples that "you have the poor with you always, and you can do good to them whenever you like."

Today in America, the ranks of the poor are growing, and the opportunities for a poor child to escape lifelong poverty are shrinking. The U.S. Census Bureau reports that 15 percent of Americans live below the poverty line. It is time to do them some good.

Timothy Egan, writing for The New York Times, notes that 42 percent of American boys raised in the bottom fifth of income remain there as adults. Only 8 percent rise from the lowest fifth to the highest.

The Economist notes that the U.S. does only half as well as Scandinavian nations to ensure that sons improve their income over that of their fathers. Upward mobility has largely collapsed for Americans.

We now rank with Britain and Italy, Europe's least-mobile societies.

Egan writes that our factory-like public high schools fail to prepare one-third of our children to continue their education. Colleges are increasingly unaffordable for the poor.

The Economist notes that our $4.5 billion test-preparation industry disproportionately caters to rich parents and their children to get into the best colleges. Poor kids can't afford to pay for professional coaching.

We Americans take pride in being a classless society, but many of our poor cannot lift themselves by their bootstraps to join the middle class. Congress still debates raising the minimum wage. In the U.S., the rich and the poor seldom even meet each other.

Egan writes that "short of winning the lottery, education is the best route to a change in class status." But his Times colleague, Jason De Parle, reports that even if the poor get to college, they are 45 percent less likely to finish than children from affluent families. Our so-called "public" colleges and universities are not easily affordable.

In his recent State of the Union speech, President Barack Obama called on the nation to "restore the basic bargain" that underlies the perennial American dream of the good life for all. Instituting free preschool education for all American children would be a good start to raising the prospects for all children, rich and poor.

Although the poor will persist among us, we can "do good to them whenever we like."

Teach sons that only God can keep them safe in life

COLUMNIST

Dear Rev. Graham: We have two small boys, and we worry about the world they're going to be facing when they grow up — a bad economy, wars, a breakdown in morals, and so on. What can we do to help prepare them for such a scary future?
— Mrs. A.M.

Dear A.M.: The best thing you can do is to provide them with a solid foundation of faith — faith in God, faith in Jesus Christ, and faith in God's Word, the Bible.

After all, every generation faces challenges; the world has seldom been a peaceful or easy place to live.

By the time they're grown, your sons may have to face challenges that aren't even on the horizon right now.

What will keep them steady in the midst of life's storms? What will give them the moral and spiritual strength they'll need?

Only God can do that — and He will, as they learn to put their trust in Him and be guided by His Word.

Teach your sons — simply but clearly — that God not only exists, but also that He loves them and wants to help them.

Teach them, too, about prayer, and about Jesus Christ and what He did for us by His death and resurrection.

Teach them, as well, the importance of the Bible to guide them through life. (Your local Christian bookstore can suggest a Bible storybook for children.)

Above all, ask God to help you be an example to your children of what it means to follow Jesus. Your words to them are important.

"THE FIGHT OF YOUR LIFE"

"Finally, be strong in the Lord and in his mighty power. Put on the full armor of God, so that you can take your stand against the devil's schemes. For our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers against the authorities, against the powers of this dark world and against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly realms. Therefore, put on the full armor of God, so that when the day of evil comes, you may be able to stand your ground, and after you have done everything, to stand."
Ephesians 6:10-13 NIV

Have you ever wondered why some of your relationships are strained, why your marriage is suddenly heading in a crazy direction, or why your child is acting the way they are? We could attribute these circumstances to stress or various stages of life, but to do this is to overlook something incredibly important. We find ourselves in a spiritual battle and we have a real enemy who wants to destroy us. Paul explained this battle in his letter to the Ephesians.

Since we find ourselves in this great battle, Paul gives us armor that we must wear to be successful in the struggle. This passage points to some key actions we can take to make sure that we are victorious in what I would call the fight of our life. First, we must refuse to lose. As soldiers in the army of Christ we must not act as civilians, but as those who know how to fight. We are not to run in retreat but stand our ground knowing that our help comes from Christ. Secondly, we must understand that the devil is looking for a secure space to lead us toward a dangerous place. If the devil can get his foot in the door, he will find one small spot in our life and destroy us from the inside out. Therefore, we must wear the belt of truth to guard against the lies of this world. Finally, we must ask ourselves the question, "Am I protected?" Before we take part in any activity or proceed in friendship with any individual we must ask this question to see whether or not there are dangers associated with the decision. Asking this question is like putting on the breastplate of righteousness and guarding your heart against the tactics of the enemy.

My prayer is that you would stand strong in this battle. In order to do so, you must put on all of God's armor so that you can take your stand when the battle is the fiercest.

Bluefin tuna numbers sinking fast

■ Popular delicacy could come off menu

By Malcolm Foster
Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS

A prospective buyer inspects the quality of tuna before a Jan. 5 auction at the Tsukiji Market in Tokyo. Catching bluefin tuna, called 'hon-maguro' in Japan, is a lucrative business — one facing extinction.

TOKYO — It is the king of sushi, one of the most expensive fish in the world — and dwindling so rapidly that some fear it could vanish from restaurant menus within a generation.

Yet there is little alarm in Japan, the country that consumes about 80 percent of the world's bluefin tuna. Japanese fisheries experts blame cozy ties between regulators and fishermen and a complacent media for failing to raise public awareness.

"Nobody really knows the bad state bluefin tuna is in," veteran sushi chef Kazuo Nagayama said from his snug, top-end sushi bar in Tokyo's Shimbashi district, a popular area for after-work socializing. "I don't think it'll disappear, but we might not be able to catch any. It's obvious we need to set quotas."

Catching bluefin tuna, called "hon-maguro" here, is a lucrative business. A single full-grown specimen can sell for 2 million yen, or $22,000, at Tokyo's sprawling Tsukiji fish market. Japanese fishermen are vying with Korean, Taiwanese and Mexican counterparts for a piece of a $900 million a year wholesale market.

Fish dealers at Tsukiji market say the number of bluefin sold at early morning auctions has fallen over the past 10 to 15 years, but most are confident the supply will never run out. Sushi bars and supermarkets still readily sell the fish, which is considered a special treat that families may splurge on once every month or two. There's no government campaign to encourage people to rein in their appetites for the iconic Japanese food.

"I have seen some reports on TV about their numbers falling, but I really haven't thought about cutting back on eating hon-maguro," said Sumire Baba, a Tokyo homemaker. "I guess I'm optimistic they'll recover."

A scientific assessment released in January found that Pacific bluefin spawning stocks — a key measure of adults that can reproduce — have plummeted by about three-quarters over the past 15 years to match historic lows last seen in the early 1980s. It estimated the species has dwindled to just 3.6 percent of its original population, and that more than 90 percent of fish caught were juveniles between the ages of 0 and 3, before they reach reproductive maturity.

The report, compiled by the International Scientific Committee for Tuna and Tuna-like Species in the Northern Pacific and based on data through 2010, received only scant coverage in the Japanese press.

The Yomiuri Shimbun, Japan's largest newspaper, ran a brief story that ignored the drop in numbers and focused on a projection offered by the report's authors that Pacific stocks could triple by 2030 if current "effort limits" were fully enforced — coverage that a senior Fisheries Agency official blasted as "misleading."

News reports earlier this year about the record $1.76 million auction sale of a Pacific bluefin at the Tsukiji market focused mostly on the exorbitant price and the buyer — the owner of a sushi chain — with little context about the species' falling numbers.

The drop follows similar plunges in the other two bluefin species, the Atlantic and the southern, which are now protected by catch quotas that experts say need to be applied to their Pacific cousins as well.

Without stricter caps, "there is a high likelihood that Pacific bluefin will become less available to Japanese consumers," said Masayuki Komatsu, a former senior Fisheries Agency official. Japan faces two choices, he said: Immediately impose catch quotas or "stop eating the bluefin to protect it."

Overfishing of the Atlantic bluefin, much of it shipped to Japan, got so bad that an export ban was proposed in 2010 at a meeting of the 175-nation Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). The proposal was rejected, and Atlantic bluefin stocks recovered slightly last year after quotas were imposed, although environmental groups say the population remains fragile.

While the media plays a role, the Fisheries Agency, domestic scientists and the fishing industry are mainly responsible for failing to address the problem and keeping the public in the dark, Komatsu and other critics say. During his tenure at the agency until 2005, regulators were often more intent on protecting fishermen than marine resources, he said, and they were also reluctant to publicize information about declining fish stocks or impose catch limits for fear of upsetting fishermen or politicians.

"Government officials don't want to accept the facts," Komatsu said. "In order to be successful as a government official, you have to listen to the fishermen because they are closely connected to the politicians. It's all very short-sighted."

Toshio Katsukawa, a fisheries professor at Mie University in western Japan, said the industry has been allowed to pursue indiscriminate fishing for years.

"This is undermining Japan's own national interests," he said.

Caribbean struggling to rebuild eroding coral reef

By David McFadden
Associated Press

ORACABESSA BAY, Jamaica — Mats of algae and seaweed have shrouded the once thick coral in shallow reefs off Jamaica's north coast. Warm ocean waters have bleached out the coral, and in a cascade of ecological decline, the sea urchins and plant-eating reef fish have mostly vanished, replaced by snails and worms that bore through coral skeletons.

Now, off the shores of Jamaica, as well as in Caribbean islands from Bonaire to St. Croix, conservationists are planting fast-growing coral species to try and turn things around by "seeding" reefs. The strategy has doubters, with one expert joking that prayer may be as effective, but conservationists say the problem is so catastrophic that inaction is not an option. According to the International Union for Conservation of Nature, live coral coverage on Caribbean reefs is down to an average of just 8 percent, from 50 percent in the 1970s.

Lenford Dacosta grew up in the north Jamaican fishing village of Oracabessa Bay and spear-fished the waters. Now he is part of a crew that tends to a small coral nursery in a fish sanctuary, hoping to revitalize the reef that sustained his village, whose shoreline is now dominated by ritzy resorts.

"I used to think that children would only hear about coral reefs and fish in books," said Dacosta, expressing hope that his work will yield fruit.

Seascape Caribbean, the fledgling company that employs Dacosta and touts itself as the region's first and only private coral restoration business, uses low-tech coral nurseries consisting of buoys and weights with small fragments of staghorn coral suspended from them on strings. The fragments grow on the strings until bits of tannish coral with the beginnings of antler-like branches are ready to be planted onto reefs.

Advocates say the reef restoration work can boost rates of recovery and improve the outlook for coral. The efforts will never resurrect the vibrant reefs of 50 years ago, they acknowledge, but they believe they can help preserve some of a reef's functionality and beauty. The tropical islands' iconic reefs protect fragile coastlines by absorbing energy from waves during hurricanes and normal conditions. Financially, the Caribbean has a multibillion-dollar beach tourism and commercial fishing economy. In Jamaica alone, reef fisheries support up to 20,000 fishermen.

Caribbean coral has deteriorated so badly that a new report from a team of international scientists says the reefs are on the threshold of gradual erosion.

AUCTION BOUND

Our policy is to keep our pre-owned inventory here no longer than 45 days (what we refer to in the industry as "fresh"). After 45 days, we tag the vehicle for transport to auction.

FAQs:

Is there anything wrong with the vehicle?
Please understand that before any vehicle is placed on our lot it is thoroughly inspected and reconditioned.
*(excludes vehicles marked "as is")

Why didn't the vehicle sell earlier?
Several scenarios may come into play – we may have several of the same make/model/ and color on our lot at the same time. Also, quite frankly, as much as we advertise, sometimes a person may not think to look here for a pre-owned Jeep or Mustang, etc.

What's the catch?
Nothing, our "fresh lot" policy is your gain. So, take a look at our "Auction Bound" inventory. You may find your next great vehicle here!

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Saturday, March 2, the 61st day of 2013. There are 304 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 2, 1943, the three-day Battle of the Bismarck Sea began in the southwest Pacific during World War II; U.S. and Australian warplanes were able to inflict heavy damage on an Imperial Japanese convoy.

On this date:

In 1917, Puerto Ricans were granted U.S. citizenship as President Woodrow Wilson signed the Jones-Shafroth Act.

In 1933, the motion picture "King Kong" had its world premiere at New York's Radio City Music Hall and the Roxy.

In 1951, the East beat the West, 111-94, in the first NBA All-Star Game, which took place at Boston Garden.

In 1962, Wilt Chamberlain scored 100 points for the Philadelphia Warriors in a game against the New York Knicks, an NBA record that still stands. (Philadelphia won, 169-147.)

In 1972, the United States launched the Pioneer 10 space probe, which flew past Jupiter in late 1973, sending back images and scientific data.

Ten years ago: Iraq crushed another six Al Samoud II missiles, as ordered by U.N. weapons inspectors. Landlocked Switzerland became the first European country to win the America's Cup as Alinghi swept Team New Zealand in five races.

Five years ago: Four adults and two children were slain in a shooting and stabbing rampage at a Memphis, Tenn., house; three children survived. (Jessie Dotson, brother of one of the victims, was convicted of six counts of murder and sentenced to death.)

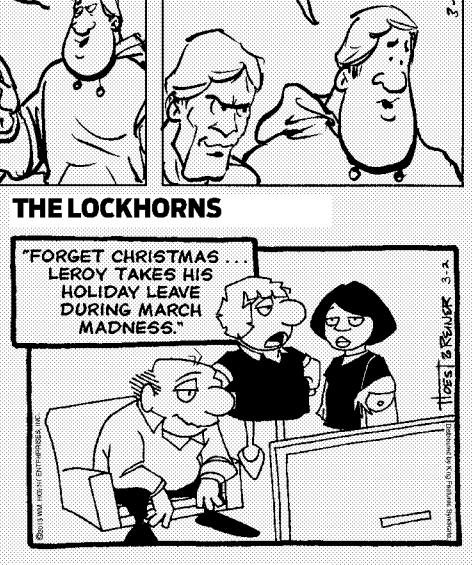

One year ago: President Barack Obama made a supportive phone call to law student Sandra Fluke (fluhk), who'd testified before Congress about the need for birth control coverage, only to be called a "slut" on the air by talk show host Rush Limbaugh on Feb. 29 (Limbaugh apologized to Fluke on March 3).

THINK ABOUT IT

"Just as we are often moved to merriment for no other reason than that the occasion calls for seriousness, so we are correspondingly serious when invited too freely to be amused."

— Agnes Repplier, American essayist (1858-1950).

Movie: Idiocracy

Most science fiction envisions a future where we've all gotten smarter. But the way things are going, a dumbed-down future is more likely. That's the premise of this spot-on 2006 satire from Mike Judge ("Office Space," "King of the Hill"). A soldier and a hooker (Luke Wilson, Maya Rudolph), both of average intelligence, are cryogenically frozen and awaken centuries later to discover they're the smartest people alive. Scary? Yes, but hilarious.

6:50 p.m. on S
Movie: Real Steel

Hugh Jackman is the nominal star, but the main attraction in this involving 2011 combination of parent-child reunion tale and fantasy-adventure is a robot. In a near-future when the masses are entertained by bouts between mechanical machines, Jackman plays a fight promoter whose previously unknown young son (Dakota Goyo) involves him in refurbishing a cyborg to make its mark in the ring. Sugar Ray Leonard, who certainly knows the game, was a consultant on the boxing.

Ed Asner

7 p.m. on 44
Hawaii Five-0

Ed Asner reprises a role he played on the original incarnation of the series in this episode: diamond smuggler August March. McGarrett and Chief Fryer (Alex O'Loughlin, Tom Sizemore) ask him to help arrange a sting operation to clear McGarrett's sister (Taryn Manning) of a smuggling charge. Footage from Asner's original appearance in 1975 is incorporated into "Kalele," Hawaiian for "faith."

8 p.m. on 14
Chicago Fire

As Dawson (Monica Raymund) attempts to help her brother (Jon Seda) figure out the details of his drug and gang investigation, she goes behind his back for assistance. Casey and his mother (Jesse Spencer, Kathleen Quinlan) try to adjust to their new relationship. As a favor to Lt. Whaley (Shane McRae), Severide (Taylor Kinney) visits a figure from his past in "Nazdarovya."

8 p.m. on Z
Movie: The Amazing Spider-Man

After three earlier screen successes, the Marvel Comics icon gets a 2012 reboot from director Marc Webb ("(500) Days of Summer") and star Andrew Garfield ("The Social Network") as Peter Parker acquires amazing abilities that help him battle his father's former partner (Rhys Ifans), now a villain who fits the appropriate moniker "The Lizard." Emma Stone plays Peter's love Gwen Stacy in a cast that also includes Martin Sheen, Sally Field and Denis Leary.

8 p.m. on 44
Golden Boy

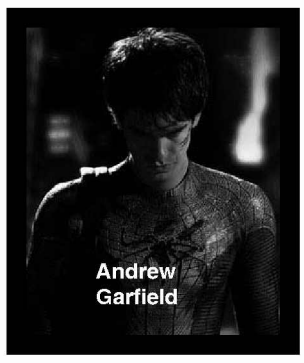

Walter William Clark Jr., New York's youngest police commissioner, reflects on his rapid rise through the ranks in this new drama series. British actor Theo James ("Downton Abbey") stars as Clark, with Chi McBride ("Boston Public") as the seasoned cop he's partnered with when he becomes a homicide detective. Kevin Alejandro and Bonnie Somerville also star.

8 p.m. on 44.2
The Following

After a new follower (Tom Lipinski) makes Carroll's (James Purefoy) true intentions known, Hardy (Kevin Bacon) tries to turn Emma, Jacob and Paul (Valorie Curry, Nico Tortorella, Adan Canto) against one another in hopes of stalling them. Emma makes a decision that shocks everyone in the new episode "The Fall."

9 p.m. on N
The Nanny

The limelight gets a little too bright when Maxwell (Charles Shaughnessy) wins a Tony for his play in "The Nanny and the Hunk Producer." The publicity attracts a tabloid reporter who writes a phony story about an affair between Fran (Fran Drescher) and Maxwell — which she alleges took place on Maxwell's honeymoon with his late wife. Daniel Davis and Lauren Lane also star.

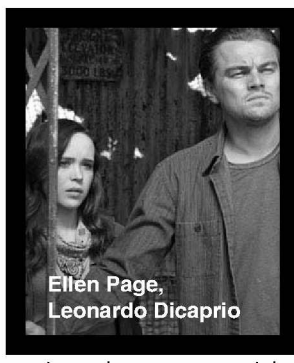

Andrew Garfield

9 p.m. on MT
Movie: Freedom Writers

Yes, it's another "teacher reaches the hearts and minds of troubled students" movie, but it has Hilary Swank, which makes it a step up from "The Substitute." Swank stars as Erin Gruwell, the real teacher on which this 2007 film is based. Patrick Dempsey, Imelda Staunton, Mario, Vanetta Smith and Hunter Parrish also star.

9:15 p.m. on H
Movie: Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2

The most profitable movie franchise in history, having passed the James Bond series, the saga based on J.K. Rowling's books reaches its end with the ultimate showdown between young wizard Harry (Daniel Radcliffe) and the sinister Lord Voldemort (Ralph Fiennes). The 2011 film also gives all the major cast members proper curtain calls, most certainly including Emma Watson and Rupert Grint as Harry's ever-loyal allies Hermione and Ron.

9:30 p.m. on T
Movie: Inception

One of the best-reviewed movies of 2010, and certainly one of the most challenging, writer-director Christopher Nolan's strikingly visual melodrama plays liberally with reality and illusion. Leonardo DiCaprio has one of his best roles to date as a futuristic thief able to rob others of what's in their minds. When he's recruited to reverse that process and plant a thought in someone's (Cillian Murphy) mind instead, things get very complicated.
